PREFACE.

As the plan which has been pursued in the execution of the HISTORICAL DICTIONARY so nearly resembles that which has already met the public approbation in a preceding work from the pen of the same compiler, little remains for him to add by way of explanation. The subjects which compose the TECHNOLOGICAL DICTIONARY relate more or less to the arts and sciences, those contained in the HISTORICAL have all an immediate reference to the history of nations, or of particular persons and places. Under the general head of History, marked by the abbreviation (Hist.) is comprehended an account of all persons whose names occur in political history: under the head of Biblical History, marked (Bibl.) are classed the names of persons or places occurring in the Bible: a description of the heathen deities is marked by the abbreviation (Myth.) for Mythology: under the names of persons in their capacity as authors, artists, &c. distinguished by the abbreviation (Biog.) for Biography, may be found a succinct account of their personal history, so far at least as relates to their family, time and place of their birth, and time of their death, together with a more particular account of their works, and their several editions, &c.: the articles marked (Geog.) for Geography, embrace the names of such places only as are entitled to notice, either from their antiquity or connexion with general history; in the account of which is included the ancient and modern name of the same places, together with a comparative view of the places themselves as to their ancient and modern state, and the several events of any importance which have befallen them at different periods: several of the fore-mentioned heads, particularly those of Mythology, History, and Geography, have received a farther illustration from medallie accounts, distinguished by the abbreviation (Numis.) for Numismatics.

As the object of the compiler has been to give this work the most extensive utility that its limits would admit of, he has endeavoured to make a selection of such articles as should be of the most general interest, and the most likely to meet the immediate wishes and wants of those who consult a work of this nature for information. How far he has succeeded in the attainment of this end it is not for him to decide; but he is satisfied that no material omission will be found; and for casual inadvertencies in minor points, he relies on the indulgence of a candid public, which he has experienced on a former occasion.

UNIVERSAL HISTORICAL DICTIONARY.

A.

AA, Peter Van der (Biog.) a bookseller of Leyden, who compiled and published, under the title of 'Galerie du Monde,' an immense collection of maps, &c. in 66 vols. folio. He also continued "Grævius' Thesaurus Antiquitatum Italiae," besides other works, and died about 1730.

AA, Charles Henry Van der, a Lutheran minister at Haerlem, had the principal hand in establishing the Haerlem Society of Sciences in 1752, and died in 1795.

AA (Geog.) āa signifies, according to Hesychius, ἀέχμη ῥέας, i. e. a conflux of waters: so a in the Saxon, and aa in the Danish, signifies either water generally, or a river, whence it has become a name common to many rivers in Switzerland, France, Holland, &c.

AAGARD, Nicholas (Biog.) was born at Wiburg, and died at the university of Sora, where he was professor in 1657. He wrote among other things 'A Treatise on Subterranean Fires.' Sax. Quom. vol. 5.

AAGARD, Christian, a Danish poet, brother to the preceding, was born in 1616, and wrote "De Hommaggio Frederici III. &c. He died in 1664, leaving a son, Severin Aagard, who wrote his father's life.

AAGESEN, Suend (Biog.) in Latin Suæno Agonis, a Danish historian, and secretary to Archbishop Absalon, wrote 1, 'Compendiosa Historia Regum Danie a Skjoldo ad Canutum VI.' 2, 'Historia Legum castrensium Regis Canuti Magni.'

AAIN, Charain (Geog.) a village six miles from Jerusalem, said to be the place where Zacharias lived, and John the Baptist was born. It is frequented by pilgrims, and has a convent built on the spot whereon stood the house of Zacharias. D'Avity Descript. de l'Asie.

AALAM (Biog.) likewise called Ebna-la-Alam, an Arabian astrologer in the ninth century. Pocock. Hist. Orient.

AALSH, Everard van (Biog.) a painter at Delft, was born in 1602, and died in 1658. He was most happy in painting fruits, and pieces of armour, &c.

AALSH, William van, nephew of the preceding, excelled his uncle in the art of painting, to which he successfully devoted his life, and died in 1679.

AAMA, Cullandin (Hist.) a king of Ethiopia, in the eighth century. Genebrard. in Chron.

C. 1452, at Mosera, on Mount Hor, where he was buried by Moses in a place unknown to the people. He was consecrated the first high priest of the Hebrews; which office was continued in his family in the person of his two youngest sons Eleazer and Iphthamar. Being gifted with remarkable eloquence, Philo Judeus makes Moses to be allegorical for mind, and Aaron for speech: Ἡάρτα γὰρ ταῦτα τῷ λόγῳ συµµετέθηκεν ὅτι ἀρετὰς ἐστὶν ἱεροίας, Omnia hæc sermوني accidunt qui frater menti est. Phil. Jud. lib. "Quod deterius insidiatur."

AARON (Hist.) there were several Arabians and Persians who bore this name:

AARON, or, according to the Arabians, Harân Arraschid, son of Mahdi, a Babylonian Caliph, begun to reign in the year 170 of the Hegira, A. D. 780, and died in the year 192 of the Hegira, A. D. 802. He was a valiant and successful warrior, and a distinguished patron of learning, but perfidious towards the conquered, and capricious towards his own subjects. Presents were interchanged between him and Charlemagne. Theophan. Chronog. ann. 773; Paul. Diac. l. 24, c. 4; Sigebert. Chron. ann. 802; Pocock's Abul Pharaj. Hist. Orient.

AARON, Amiralmummin, a king of Persia, who sent presents to Charlemagne. Sigebert, in his Chronographia, mentions the two preceding under the distinct names of Aaron Amymuslin and Aaron Ammiras. Eginhard in Vit. Carol. Mag. Annal. Franc. 802.

AARON, Isaac, a magician, and the particular confidant of Manuel Comnenus. He recommended to Andronicus to put out the eyes and cut out the tongues of his enemies, which punishment was afterwards inflicted on himself, by order of Isaac Angelus, who had expelled Andronicus from the throne. Nicet. Chron. Annal. l. 4.

AARON, brother of Buprastus, and governor of Baspracan or Media, beat the Turks A. D. 1012. Cedren. Comp. Hist. p. 286.

ABD'ALRAHMAN (Hist.) or Abd'errahmān, Abderramen, Abderame, Abderrahmān, Abdo'rrahmān, Abdu'rrahmān, as it is variously written, a name common to many distinguished Saracens particularly of a family descended from the Omniades, who being almost all destroyed in Africa repaired to Spain, where they reigned till the 14th century.

Kings of Cordova of this Name.

ABD'ALRAHMAN, surnamed Adahil, or the founder, because he founded a new kingdom of the Moors, in Spain, built a splendid mosque at Cordova; and, after a reign particularly obnoxious to the Christians, died in the year of the Hegira 177, A. D. 787. Vas. Chron. Ann. 787; Rod. Tolet. de Reb. Hisp. l. 9, c. 18; Hist. Arab.; Marian. de Reb. Hisp. l. 7, c. 7; Marmol. L'Afrique, l. 2, c. 20.
ABD'ALRAHMAN, first stamped his name on his coin. He made a league with Rainurin king of Castille, and died in 846 or 859, leaving 45 sons and 42 daughters. This prince was employed by his father Alcahan, or, according to Marmol, Aliatan, to inflict a signal vengeance on the rebellious inhabitants of Toledo, of whom he slew 5 or 6,000. He was succeeded by his son Mahomet. Vas. Ann. 839; Marian. l. 7, c. 13; Marmol. L'Afrique, l. 2, c. 23.
ABD'ALRAHMAN, surnamed the Exalter of the Law, succeeded his father Abdallah. He, wanting to exterminate all the Christians, made many martyrs during a reign of more than 50 years. He died in 958 or 961. Vas. Ann. 918; Marian. de Reb. Hisp. l. 7, c. 19; Marmol. L'Afrique, l. 2, c. 26.

ABILA (Bibl.) Ἀβίλα, a town of Coelosyria, now Bellinas, capital of Abilene, a province of which Lysanias was tetrarch as mentioned by St. Luke iii. 1. It answers to the Leucas of the Greeks, [vide Leucas] which is a translation of the Hebrew, Abila or Abel, white. These two names are to be found on a medal of Faustina, which bears the inscription ΑΕΥΚΑΔΩΝ ΑΒΙΛΑ ΤΑC, 236. Whether this medal refers to the Abila of Lysanias, or any other Abila, is a matter of question. The type, a bunch of grapes, denotes that the place abounded in grapes, which corresponds with what is said of this town by Eusebius and Jerome; but on the other hand, the date 236 from the era of Pompey, would, in the opinion of some, bring this town earlier under the dominion of the Romans than it really came. The gentile name of Abila, was Abylenus, as we learn from the inscription ΑΒΙΑΗΝΙΩΝ, found on a medal of Antoninus Britannicus. *Polyb. l. 5, c. 71; Plin. l. 5, c. 18; Ptol. l. 5, c. 15; Joseph. l. 19, c. 5; Antonin. ABYDUS (Numis.) the two first towns of this name struck several medals.

ABYDUS, on the Hellespont, adopted the symbols of Medusa's head, the anchor and the eagle on its earlier medals; but those which were struck under their archons in honour of the emperors, as of Antonius Pius, Verus, Commodus Severus, Caracalla, and Mamea, had many devices, bearing the several inscriptions of A. AB. ABY. ABYΔ. ABYΔH. ABYΔH. NQN. and in many the name of the archon. The annexed cut represents, on the obverse, the head of Alexander Severus, adorned with laurel, the inscription ΑΥΤ. ΚΑΙΣ. Μ. ΑΥΡ. ΚΕΥ. ΑΔΕ. ΑΛΕΑΝΔΡΟC. CEB. Ἀυτοκράτωρ Καίσαρ Μάρκος Ἀυρήλιος Σευήρος Ἀλεξανδρος Σεβαστός. Imperator Cæsar Marcus Aurelius Severus Alexander Augustus. On the reverse, Leander swimming to a tower on which Hero stands holding forth a torch, with the inscription ΗΡΩ. ΑΕΑΝΔΡΟC. ABYΔH. Hero Leander Abydenorum; in allusion to the well known tale of Leander and Hero, the torch being emblematical of the torch of love. Leander raises his hands and supplicates the gods in the words of Ovid:

Parcite dum propero, mergite cum redeo.

ABYDUS, in Egypt, a medal of Severus, representing the emperor under the form of Osiris, is referred by most antiquaries to this town. Another, which is given by Vaillant, bears, on the reverse, an eagle standing on thunder, with the inscription ΠΤΟΛΕΜΑΙΟΥ ΣΩΤΗΡΟΣ; and in the area of the coin the letters AB i. e. Ἀβυδηνών, Abydenorum. Vaillant. Num. Ptol. Reg. Ægypt.; Tristan. Comm. Hist. tom. 2, p. 102.

ABYLA (Geog.) Ἀβύλη, a mountain of Africa, called Abila by Pliny, now Des-Singes. It is opposite to another mountain on the coast of Spain, called Calpe, which were together entitled the Pillars of Hercules. Strab. l. 3; Plin. l. 5, c. 1; Mela. l. 1, c. 5; Marmol. l. 4, c. 53.

ABYSSINIA (Geog.) a large country and kingdom of Africa, about 800 leagues long, and 280 broad. It is indifferently called Abissinia, Abyssinia, Abessinia, and Abassia; but more properly Habessinia, from the Arabic Habesh, which signifies mixture or confusion, the country being inhabited by a mixed race of people. The Portuguese also gave it by mistake the name of the country of Prester John. Prester, which was a corruption of Presbyter, being the ordinary title given to the spiritual princes of a territory in Asia, subject, in spirituals, to Babylon. It is bounded on the E. by the Red Sea, on the N. by Nubea, on the W. by Nigritia, and on the S. by Caffraria.

Division. It is divided into the provinces of Ambara, Dambea, Douba, Gojam, Holcaila, Magaza, Narea, Ogara, Saalgoad, Salacta, Samen, Xaou, and Tigre.

Principal Towns. Gondar, the capital, Amhadar, Ambianum, Bagameder, Adow, Madgoga, or Fremona, as it is now called, Axum, and a few more which constitute the whole number of towns in Abyssinia; the rest being only villages leading to Gondar.

Mountains. Geshen, or Guexen, where the princes of the blood used to be confined; Tadhaba Marjan, on which seven churches were built, besides innumerable others which exceed any mountains in Europe in height.

Rivers. The Abawi, or Nile, which has its source in Abyssinia; the Tacatza, supposed to be the Asaboras of Ptolemy; the Matche Zebec, Hoax, or Hawash; Mureb, Bulhilo, or Baxilo; Guexem, Anguer, &c.

Lakes. Zoni, or Zowania, Dembea, &c.

An island in the Propontis. Plin. l. 5, c. 32.

ACANTHUS (Numis.) the medals extant under this name are attributed, by all antiquarians, to the Acanthus in Macedonia. On the obverse of the subjoined cat is represented a lion devouring an ox, and, on the reverse, a square divided into four smaller squares, with the inscription AKANΘION, or on some AKAN. The workmanship of these and similar medals sufficiently proves their antiquity. Peller. Rec. de Med.; Hunter. Num. Vet. Pop. et Urb.

ACAPARAM (Geog.) a town of Bithynia, on the shore of the Euxine, now Carpi. D'Avity. Descript. Asie.

ACARION (Biog.) 'Ακαρίων, a writer referred to by the scholiast on Apollonius. Argonautic. l. 2.

ACARNANIA (Geog.) 'Ακαρνανία, a region of Epirus, near the bay of Ambracia, so named after Acarnas, now Carnia and Despotato. The Acarnanians, who were originally called Crurates, were an effeminate and luxurious people, whence, according to Lucian, the proverb of Porcellus Acarnanius. Their breed of horses, however, was so superior that 'Ακαρνικοί ἵπποι became proverbial for any thing excellent. Thucyd. l. 2, c. 10; Polyb. l. 5, c. 90; Scylax. in Perpl. l. 2, c. 3; Strab. l. 7, c. 9; Plin. l. 4, c. 1; Mela. l. 2, c. 3; Paus. l. 8, c. 24; Ptol. l. 3, c. 14; Lucian. Dial. Meret.; Macrob. l. 1, c. 12; Steph. Byz. de Urb.; Nig. Geog. Comm. l. 11.

ACARNANIA (Numis.) the medals of Acarnania were some of them common to the whole country as in the subjoined cuts.

ACCA (Myth.) Acca, the companion of Camella. Virg. Æn. l. 11, v. 820.

Alloquitur.

ACCA, Laurentia, a goddess of the Romans, said to be the nurse of Romulus and Remus. She was the wife of Faustus, Numitor's shepherd, who, for her wantonness, was called lupa, a prostitute, or she wolf; whence the story that Romulus was suckled by a wolf. Plutarch mentions another prostitute of the same name, to whom divine honours were likewise paid at the feast of the Laurentalia. Dionys. Hal. l. 1, c. 18; Liv. l. 1, c. 4; Varr. de Lat. Lin. l. 5; Aul. Gel. l. 6, c. 7; Plut. in Rom. et Quæst. Rom.; Servius in Virg. Æn. 1, v. 27; Voss. de Idol. l. 1, c. 12.

ACCA, Tarentia vel Turuntia, another goddess worshipped by the Romans. Var. de Lat. Lin. l. 5.

ACCA, St. (Ecc.) bishop of Hagustald, or Hexham, in Northumberland, succeeded Wrofid in the year 709. He wrote 'Officia Sue Ecclesie, &c.' Bed. Hist. Eccl. Gent. Anglor. l. 5, c. 20; Cave. Hist. Lit. vol. xvi. 619; Fabr. Bibl. Med. et Infim. Lat. vol. ii. l. 1.

ACCABICUS murus (Geog.) Ἀκαβικὸν τεῖχος, a town near the pillars of Hercules, built by the Carthaginians. Steph. Byz. de Urb.

ACCAD (Geog.) אַכַּד, called by the Septuagint Ἀρχὰδ, (Gen. x. 10,) was a city built by Nimrod, the situation of which is not ascertained. It is supposed, by Dr. Wells, to be Tittacene, which, according to Pliny, is the same as Arbelites, in the country round Arbela. Well. Geog. of the Old and New Test.

ACCÆUS (Hist.) the first king of Attica.

ACCARISI, Albert (Biog.) a grammarian of Cento, in the Dutchy of Ferrara, published in the 16th century 'A Vocabulary, Grammar, and Orthography of the vulgar Tongue.'

ACCARISI, Francis, a civilian of Ancona. He wrote comments on the Institutes and Pandects, and died Oct. 4, 1622.

ACCARON (Geog.) Ἀκαρῶν, a town of Palestine, the Ekron of the Bible, now Accaron.

ACCEPTUS (Ecc.) an ecclesiastic of Frejus, in Provence, who accused himself falsely of different crimes to avoid being elected bishop, wherefore in a council of Dauphiny, it was decreed that for the future such persons should be held infamous on their own confession.

ACCETTO, Reginald (Biog.) an Italian, and author of a Thesaurus of the Italian language, died at Naples in 1560.

ACCIO (Geog.) אַצִּי, Ἀκκίω; a town situated on the north of Mount Carmel, belonging to the tribe of Ashur. Judg. i. 31. It was the seat of war in the time of the Crusades, and was then called Acre, now Acre. [Vide Acre] In the Maccabees it is mentioned frequently under the name of Ptolemais. Euseb. apud Hieron. de Sit. et Nom. Loc.; Heb. in Voce Ἀκκίω.

ACCI (Geog.) Ἀκκί, a town of Hispania Tarriconensis, now Gnadiæ. The people were called Accitani, as appears from the several inscriptions and medals. [Vide Accitani] Ptol. l. 2, c. 6; Vasæus in Chron.

ACCI (Numis.) this town struck medals in honour of Augustus, Tiberius, Germanicus, Drusus, and Caligula. The subjoined fig. 1, represents, on the obverse, a head of Augustus, bare, with the Simpulum, legend above, Colonia Julia Gemella, below ACCI. Another medal of Tiberius has on the reverse the heads of Germanicus and Drusus. Harduin. Num. Ant. illust.; Florez. Med. de Espana. tab. 51, fig. 2.

ACCIA (Hist.) or Abia, daughter of Julia and Atius Balbus, was the mother of Augustus. She died about forty years A. C. Dio. l. 45; Suet. Aug. c. 4.

ACCIA, Variola, a female of distinction, whose cause was ably defended by Pliny the younger. Sidonius Apollinaris, in his book to Rusticus, says that Pliny gained more credit from that cause than from his panegyric of Trajan. Pliny speaks very much of it in his Epistles, l. 5, ep. 33.

ACCIA (Geog.) a town of Corsica, now in ruins, formerly the see of a bishop, which is removed to Mariana.

ACCIAIOLI (Hist.) a noble family of Florence, which was fruitful in great men, and for some time held the sovereign authority, in Corinth, Thebes, and Athens.

ACCIAIOLI, Nicholas, of the above-mentioned illustrious family, was born in 1310, and died in 1366, after having acted a very important part in the government of Naples, under Catherine, the widow of Philip, and her son Robert.

ACCIAIOLI, Renatus, conquered Athens, Corinth, and Bœotia in the 15th century. At his death, having no male legitimate issue, he gave Athens to the Venetians; Corinth to Theodorus Palæologus; and Bœotia to his natural son Anthony. Chalcond. Hist. Turc. l. 4 & 9.

ACCIAIOLI, Donato, a statesman and scholar of the same family, was born in 1428, and died in 1478, after having been employed on several important missions for the republic. Dying poor he was honoured with a splendid funeral at the public expence, and his daughters were also portioned out at the expence of the state in recompence of his signal services. His works are, 1. 'Expositio super libros Ethicorum Aristotelis, in novam traductionem Argyropili,' Fol. Florent. 1478. 2. 'In Aristotelis libros octo Politicorum commentarii,' 8vo. Venet. 1566. 3. The lives of Alcibiades, Demetrius, Annibal, and Scipio, translated from Plutarch for the Latin collection of that author, to which he added a life of Charlemagne. 4. 'La Storia Fiorentina,' &c. translated from the Latin of Leonard d'Arcezzo, Fol. Venice, 1473, and often reprinted. 5. An Italian translation of the life of his kinsman Nicholas Acciaïoli, which had been written by Palmerius, under the title of 'Matthæi Palmerii Florentini de vita et rebus gestis Nicolai Acciaïoli Florentini, magni Apuliæ Seneschalli ab anno 1310, ad annum 1366, commentarius.' The translation of this work was printed at Florence in 1588, with the history of the family of Ubal dini, but the original is inserted in Muratori's collection of Italian Historians.

ACCIAIOLI, Angelo (Ecc.) a cardinal and archbishop of Florence, was created a cardinal by Urban VI, in 1384, and died in 1407, after having been employed by Boniface IX, as legate to Naples, Hungary, and elsewhere.

ACCIAIOLI, Nicholas, a cardinal, was elevated to that dignity by Clement IX, in 1669, on the score of his great merits; and died in 1719, at the age of 89. He was so esteemed by the cardinals that he had, like the preceding, many voices in the conclave for his election to the Pontificate.

ACCIAIOLI, Zanobio (Biog.) probably of the same family as the preceding, was born at Florence in 1461, and died in 1519 or 1520. He made a Latin oration in praise of Naples in 1515, which he afterwards published, besides translating into Latin Eusebius of Cæsarea, Theodoret, Olympiodorus, &c. and publishing Politien's Greek epigrams. Whilst acting as librarian to the Vatican under Leo, he undertook the laborious task of arranging the ancient public documents, of which he formed an index published by Montfaucon in his Bibl. Bibliothecarum MSS. vol. i. He was also reckoned a great poet.

ACCIAIOLI, John, of the above-mentioned family, who flourished in the 16th century, was the author of a work entitled 'Multa doctissimorum problematum monumenta magno studio et ingenio elucubrata.'

ACCIO, Zucco (Biog.) surnamed da Summa Campagna, an Italian poet of Verona, who flourished about 1470, was the author of a work published under the title of 'Acci Zuechi Summa Campanæ, Veronensis viri eruditissimi in Æsopi Fabulas interpretatio per rhythmos,' &c. 4to. Veron. 1479, in which each fable is preceded by a Latin epigram. This work was reprinted in 1491, 1498, and 1497.

ACCIUS, Tullius (Hist.) vide Actius.

ACCIVS, Lucius (Biog.) a Latin tragic poet, and intimate friend of Junius Brutus the Consul. Of all his works not more than 799 verses are extant, which are to be found scattered in Cicero and other authors, and collected in the 'Corpus Poetarum Latinorum.' Of him and Pacuvius, Quintillian says 'Tragœdiæ scriptores Accius atque Pacuvius clarissimi, gravitate sententiarum, verborumque pondere et auctoritate personarum virium tamen Accio plus tribuitus.'

ACCO (Myth.) 'Ακκίω, the name of an old woman who fell mad at seeing her own deformity in a looking-glass, whence the word accissare, in Latin signifying to be mad; also the proverb ἐπὶ τοῖς ὀφθαλμοῖς Ἀκκίζεσθαι, speaking of one who delights to look at himself. Lucian de Merced. Serv.; Athen. l. xiii.; Zenob. Proverb. Ant. 53; Diogenian. Prov. Ant. 2; Suid. Prov. Ant. 82; Cæd. Rhodig. l. xvii. c. 2.

AC-COINLU (Hist.) or white sheep, a family of Turcomans, who reigned in Asia, so called from the ensign they bore. They succeeded the dynasty distinguished by the name of the Cara-Coinlu, or the Black Sheep.

Chronological Succession of the Ac-coinlu.

Thour Ali Beg, the first of this dynasty.

Courlu Beg, the second son of Thour Ali.

Cara Ilug Athman, son of the preceding, died in the year of the Hegira 809, A. D. 1419.

Hamzag Beg, son of Cara Ilug, died in the year of the Hegira 848, A. D. 1458.

Gehanghir, nephew of Hamzag, died in the year of the Hegira 872, A. D. 1482.

Hassan al Thaoual, or Ussanhassan, brother of the preceding, died in the year of the Hegira 883, A. D. 1493.

Khalil Beg, son of the preceding, died in the year of the Hegira 884, A. D. 1494.

Jacob Beg, brother of Khalil, died of poison in the year of the Hegira 896, A. D. 1506.

Massih Beg, brother of Khalil, or son of Jacob, reigned only a year and eight months.

Roslam Mirza, grandson of Ussanhassan, reigned about five years and a half.

Ahmed, son of Ogivilce, and grandson of Ussanhassan, reigned only a year.

Alvend Mirza, a third grandson of Ussanhassan.

Morad, son of Jacob, was stripped of his kingdom by Ismael Sofi, king of Persia, in the year of the Hegira 915, A. D. 1525. The author of the Nighiaristan makes the number of sultans to be only nine.

ACCOLTI (Hist.) the name of an ancient family of Tuscany which produced some men of distinction; as ACCOLTI, Benedetto, son of Michael Accolti, was born at Arezzo in 1415, and died in 1466. He followed his father's profession, and filled with great credit the office of secretary to the republic of Florence for the last seven years of his life, and, besides the extensive correspondence which he held, he wrote, 1. 'De bello a Christianis contra Barbaros gesto, pro Christi sepulchro et Judea recuperandis libri quatuor,' 4to. Venet. 1532; which was reprinted several times, and once with notes by Thomas Dempster, 4to. Florence, 1623. 2. 'De Prestantia virorum sui ævi.' Parm. 1689, 1692.

ACCOLTI, Benedetto, descended from the same family, set on foot a conspiracy against Pope Pius IV, under pretence that he was not duly elected. He suffered with five others a capital punishment for this crime in 1564.

ACCOLTI, Peter (Ecc.) son of Benedict the lawyer, was born in 1455, and died in 1532. He was created cardinal by Pope Julius II in 1511; successively held the bishoprics of Ancona, Arras, and Cremona, and in 1524 was made archbishop of Ravenna. He left some historical treatises.

ACCOLTI, Benedetto, nephew of the preceding, was called the Cicero of the age, on account of his skill in the Latin language. He succeeded his uncle in the archbishopric of Ravenna, was made cardinal by Clement VII in 1527, and died in 1549, leaving a treatise on the Pope's right to the kingdom of Naples, and other works in prose and verse.

ACCOLTI, Bernard (Biog.) another son of Benedict the lawyer, was distinguished in his day by his poetry, which gained him universal applause. A collection of his poems was printed at Venice in 1519 and 1553.

ACCOLTI, Francis d'Arezzo, vide Arelin.

ACCOLTI, Peter, published a book of practical perspective in Italian, at Arezzo, in 1625.

ACHAIA (Numis.) the general name for all Greece, after it became a Roman province, as may be learnt from their medals bearing the inscription ΑΧ. ΑΧΑΙΩΝ, or the two letters in one χ. On a medal of Adrian was inscribed RESTITUTORI ACHAIAE, as on the subjoined cut, which represents the emperor as raising Achaia; by his side stands a vessel having branches of olive. On a medal of Antinous is inscribed ΤΟΙΣ ΑΧΑΙΟΙΣ ΑΝΕΘΗΚΕΝ, i. e. Achaëis posuit; and on one of L. Verus ΣΤΡΑΤΗΓῆ Μάρκου ΔΥΡΕΛΙΝ ΔΙΟΔΟΡΟΥ ΜΕΝΟΦΙΛΩ ΑΧΑΙΩΝ. Prætoræ Marcus Aurelio Diodoro Menophli. F. Achæorum. To the general name ΑΧΑΙΩΝ was often added that of the cities of Achaia, as ΑΧΑΙΩΝ ΑΝΤΙΓΟΝΕΩΝ. Jupiter was held in particular honour by the Achæans, who gave him the name of homogyrius, i. e. a collector into one body. His symbol of thunder is frequently to be observed on their medals. Hercules and Neptune had also their share of honour. *Patin. Numis. Roman.; Tristan. Comment. Histor. tom. i. p. 174; Vaillant. Numis. Imperator Romanor; Harduin. Numm. Pop. Vet. illustrat.; Haym. ACHELOUS (Geog.) Ἀχελῷος, 1. a river of Epirus, called after Achelous, now Aspropotamo, or, according to Niger, Catochi. It rises in Mount Pindus, and, separating Acarnania from Ætolia, falls into the Ionian sea. Homer calls it κρείων Ἀχελῷος, Achelous the king of rivers; Hesiod, Ἀχελῷος ἀργυροῖνη, limpid Achelous. It was also taken for water in general: whence Euripides speaks of Ἀχελῷος, the dew of Achelous; and Virg. Geog. l. 1, v. 9.

Poculaque inventis Acheloida miscuit uvis.

Hom. Il. l. 21, v. 194; Hesiod. Theog. v. 340; Herod. l. 2, c. 10; Euripid. in Androm.; Thucyd. l. 2, c. 102; Polyb. l. 4, c. 63; Scylax. in Peripl.; Diodor. l. 5; Strab. l. 10; Liv. l. 43, c. 21; Mela. l. 2, c. 4; *Sil. ACKLAND, Sir John (Hist.) the first baronet in the family mentioned under Heraldry, was a zealous adherent to King Charles I, and suffered much for his loyalty.

ACKLAND, Sir Thomas, the seventh baronet, major of the 20th regiment of foot, and colonel in the Devonshire militia, served, in the campaign in Canada, under general Burgoyne, when he was severely wounded, and taken prisoner. He died of his wounds in 1778.

ACKLAND, Lady Harriet Caroline, daughter of Stephen, first earl of Ilchester, and wife of the preceding, distinguished herself by her fortitude and devotion to her husband, whom she accompanied through all his trials and misfortunes.

ACKLAND (Her.) a family which derives its name from its ancient seat in the parish of Lankey, near Barnstaple, being in the midst of large groves of oaks; hence the Saxon akland, or oakland. In early times their arms were three oak-leaves on a bend between two lions rampant. The first baronet of this name, who lineally descended from Hugh de Aecalin, was created March 1, 1644. [vide Acland, Sir John] The arms, crest, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Cheeky argent and sable, a fess gules.

Crest. A man's hand, couped at the wrist, in a glove lying fessways, thereon a falcon perched, all proper.

ACMÆ, a mistress of Septimius mentioned by Catullus.

ACMODÆ (Geog.) the name of different islands on the British coast, as, 1. The islands of the Silures, now called Scilly Isles. 2. Acmodæ or Æmodæ, the name for the northern islands which are now called Schellund Isles, according to Cluverius. Plin. l. 4, c. 16; Mela, l. 3, c. 6; Cluver. German. Antiq. l. 3, c. 40.

ACMON (Myth.) 1. The name of one of the most ancient among the gods, who was the father of Chaos. Lactant. in Stat. Theb. l. 4, v. 416; Bocac. in Deor. Gen. l. 1, c. 3. 2. A native of Lyrnessæus, who accompanied Æneas into Italy; his father's name was Clytus. Virg. Æn. l. 10, v. 128.

ACMONENSES (Geog.) the gentile name for the inhabitants of Aconia. [Vide Aconia]

ACMONIA (Geog.) Ἀκμωνία, now Severino; a town of Phrygia Major, near Mount Sipylus, the gentile name of which, Acmonenses, may be learnt from the inscriptions given in the following article. Cic. pro Flacc. c. 15; Plin. l. 5, c. 29; Ptol. l. 5, c. 2; Steph. Byz.; Mar. Nig. Geog. Comm. l. 10.

ACMONIA (Numis.) from the number of medals and coins struck in this town, it is supposed to have been a place of some consequence. The magistrates were named archons, as may be learned from the inscriptions on the medals of Septimius Severus ΕΠΙ. ΦΑ. ΠΡΕΙΚΟΥ ΑΡΧ. ΤΟ Β ΑΚΜΟΝΕΩΝ sub Flavio. Prisco Archonte iterum, Acmonensium: a similar inscription is also to be found on a coin of Plautilla, the wife of Caracalla; but in general the name of the magistrate is put without the title, as on a medal of Agrippina, the mother of Nero, ΕΠΙ ΣΕΡΟΤΙΝΙΟΥ ΚΑΠΙΤΩΝΟΚ ΚΑΙ ΙΟΥΛΙΑΣ ΣΕΟΥΡΑΚ ΑΚΜΟΝΕΩΝ sub Serotinio Capitone et Julia Severa Acmonensium; according to Harduin, the inscription ought to be read ΕΠΙ ΣΕΡΟΥΛΑΙΟΥ ΚΑΙ ΠΙΩΝΟΣ, but Haym contends that it ought to be read ΣΕΡΟΥΗΠΙΟΥ ΚΑΠΙΤΩΝΟΚ ΚΑΙ ΙΟΥΛΙΑΣ ΣΕΟΥΡΑΚ, Severio Capitone et Julia Severa, which he gives as a medal of Nero bearing on the obverse the head of the emperor, the inscription ΝΕΡΩΝ ΣΕΒΑΚΤΟΚ ΑΚΜΟΝΕΙΟΚ. This town struck medals in honour of Germanicus, Caligula, Agrippina, Claudius, Nero, Hadrian, M. Aurelius, Commodus, Sept. Severus, Jul. Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Alex. Severus, Gordianus Pius, Otacilia Severus, and Trebonius Gallus. They worshipped not only Jupiter and Diana, but also Minerva, Hercules, Bacchus, Mercury and Æsculapius. The Acmonenses became Neocori in the reign of Philip, and are sometimes entitled ΙΕΡΑ ΒΟΥΛΗ, sacra curia, & ΜΕΤΡΟΠΟΛΙΣ Metropolis.

ÆBUTIUS (Hist.) or Æbutia, gens, the name of a Roman family, which was both patrician and plebeian: the former having the surname of Elva, and the latter that of Carus. Frequent mention is made of this family by historians, and on medals, as may be seen under Numismatics.

ÆBUTIUS, T. Elva, at first a consul, and afterwards master of the horse, under Posthumus the Dictator; was at the famous battle of the lake Regillus, where he engaged in single combat with Mamilius, the Latin general, and was wounded in the arm, U. C. 225. Livy, l. 2, c. 19.

ÆBUTIUS, L., a consul, U. C. 290, and died the same year. Liv. l. 3, c. 6.

ÆBUTIUS, M., Elva, was created a triumvir, for transplanting a colony to Ardea. Liv. l. 4, c. 11.

ÆBUTIUS, P., Carus, a duumvir at Corinth, under Augustus.

ÆBUTIUS, a brave general under Vespasian, who was killed at the siege of Jerusalem. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. 3, c. 2; l. 4, c. 4.

ÆBUTIUS (Numis.) four medals were struck by the Corinthians in honour of Augustus and Anthony, during the magistracy of the Æbutii, one of which bore the inscription AUGUSTUS CORINTHUS, on the reverse, Publio. ÆBUTIO. Caio. JULIO. HERACLIDE II. VIRIS. QUINQUENnalibus. ITERum. in a crown of laurel. The Duumviri Quinquennales were magistrates chosen every five years. Vaill. Numis. Famil. Roman.; Morel. Numis. Famil. Roman.

ÆCANA (Geog.) an episcopal town of the Daunian Apulia, now called Troja.

ÆCHMAGORAS (Myth.) Αἰχμαγόρας, the son of Hercules, by Phillone, who was exposed with his mother on a mountain, by his grandfather Alcimedon. Hercules, attracted to the spot by the cry of a magpie, which was imitating that of the child, delivered them both from their chains. Paus. l. 8, c. 12.

ÆCHME (Ant.) Αἰχμή, the name of a dog, which Xenophon recommends for its shortness. De Venat.

ÆCHMIS (Hist.) Αἰχμῆς, a son of Briacus, succeeded his uncle Polymnestor, king of Arcadia, who died without issue. In his reign there was a war between the Messenians and the Lacedæmonians, in which he took part as the ally of the former. Paus. l. 8, c. 5.

ÆCIUS (Hist.) Αἰκίος, a man, who, according to Strabo, left Athens after the Trojan war, and went to live in Eretria.

ÆCMETLI (Geog.) a village on the shore of the Caspian sea, having small lakes in the vicinity.

ÆDEMON (Hist.) a freedman of Ptolemy, took up arms to revenge the death of his master, who had suffered by the hands of Caligula, but perished in the attempt. Plin. l. 5, c. 1; Dio. l. 60.

ÆDEPSUM (Geog.) Αἰδῆψον, a town in the island of Eubæa, where were the hot baths of Hercules. Strab. l. 12.

ÆDEPSUM (Numis.) a medal of this town bears the figure of the cancer, which is a frequent symbol on the medals of insular places; the inscription ΑΙΔΗΨΙΩΝ. Goltz. Thes.

ÆDES (Topog.) a term frequently applied to the temples of Rome, of which the following are the principal mentioned by historians and topographers, namely:

A town of Eubœa, Loeris, Lydia, and Ætolia, according to Stephanus. The gentile name was Ægeus, Ægeensis, or Ægæates. Steph. Byz. de Urb.*

ÆGÆ (Numis.) the towns of this name had medals of an early date, which are to be distinguished from each other not only by the mode of spelling the name, but by the type and other marks. Those of Ægæ in Macedonia bear, on the obverse, the head of Apollo; on the reverse, the figure of a goat, or sometimes a goat's head; it having assumed this symbol because, as is said, the town was taken by Caramus, king of Macedonia, in consequence of his following the track of a herd of goats; legend ΑΙΓΑΙΩΝ. Those of Ægæ, in Cilicia, also bear the head of a goat, in allusion, as is supposed, to its name, having on the obverse a turreted head; and on the reverse, besides the symbol, is the legend ΑΙΓΕΑΙΩΝ. ΤΗΣ. ΙΕΡΑΣ. ΚΑΙ. ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΣ, showing that it was a sacred and free city. This Ægæ likewise struck medals in honour of Tiberius, Agrippina, Claudius, Adrian, M. Aurelius, Commodus, Severus, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Plautilla, Macrinus, Diadumianus, Alex. Severus, Pupienus, Gordianus Pius, Æmilianus, Trajan Decius, and Salonina. Having received several benefits from Julius Cæsar, it dated its epocha from the Julian æra, U. C. 707, and fixed it on most of its imperial coins, to some of which are added other titles, as Hadriana, Commodiana, Severina, Antoniana, Macrini Urbs, Alexandri Urbs, &c. in honour of Adrian, Commodus, Severus, Caracalla, Macrinus, and Alexander Severus, from whom they received special favours, as appears from the inscription KOMOΔΙΑΝΩΝ ΔΑΔΙΑΝΩΝ. ΑΙΤΕΙΑΩΝ. ΕΤΟΥ. ΔΔC. i. e. Commodianorum Hadrianorum. Ægeorum, anno 234. Being a considerable port, it received the title of Navarchis, and also the dignity of the Neocoria, from Alexander Severus, as appears from the inscription ΑΙΓΕΩΝ. ΝΕ. ΝΑΥ. Ægeensium Neocorum Navarchidos. It is moreover to be observed, that the name of this town is written differently in different inscriptions, as may be seen from those which follow: ΑΙΓΕΑΙΩΝ. The earlier medals of Æge, in Æolia, bear sometimes a turreted head of an Amazon, a figure of a Minerva, armed as usual; or of a female holding an anchor, &c.; inscription ΑΙΓΑΙΕΩΝ. This town struck medals in honour of Tiberius, Claudius, Agrippina, Vespasian, Domitian, L. Verus, Alexander Severus, and Trajan Decius. Their magistrates were prætors, as appears from inscriptions on the imperial medals. ΕΠΙC. ΤΡΑΤΗΓΥ ΕΥΤΥΧΟΥC ΑΙΓΑΕΩΝ, Sub Prætoræ Eutycho Ægeorum; on a medal of Alexander Severus, ΕΠΙ. ÆΓΕΥΜ, mare (Geog.) a sea which separates Greece from Asia Minor, and contains many small islands, as the Cyclades, Sporades, &c. It is called by Herodotus, Strabo, and Ptolemy, Αἰγαίον πέλαγος; by Pliny, Ægeum Mare; by Mela, Ægeum Mare; now the Archipelago. It is supposed by Varro to be derived from the islands or rocks which resembled αἶγες, goats; but, according to Plutarch, it takes its name from Ægeus, the father of Theseus, who drowned himself there; and Hyginus derives the name from Ægea, a place in Eubœa; and Festus, from Ægea, Queen of the Amazons, who perished there. It is described by the poets under the name of Ægeon, or Ægon. Stat. Theb. l. 5.

Description of Ancient Egypt.

Extent and Division. Ancient writers are not agreed about the precise extent of Egypt; some, as Herodotus, circumscribing it within the country called Delta, and others, as Strabo, extending it to the country of Cyrenia; but its general boundaries were the Mediterranean on the N., Arabia on the E., Æthiopia on the S., and Lybia on the W. It was divided by Ptolemy into three parts, namely, the Delta, Heptanomis, and Thebais; by Strabo, and other writers, into two, Ægyptus Inferior, comprehending the Delta, &c. and those parts which are washed by the Mediterranean, and Ægyptus Superior, consisting of the Heptanomis and Thebais.

Principal Towns. According to Diodorus, Egypt contained nearly 20,000 towns, the principal of which were ÆGYPTUS (Numis.) no medals are extant which are supposed to have been struck by the Egyptians before the reign of Alexander the Great, although they probably had coined money much earlier, after the manner of the Phœnicians. From the commencement of the reign of the Lagides, Ptolemy Soter I, and his successors, struck medals or coins of gold, silver, or bronze, and after this country fell under the power of the Romans, many medals were struck in honour of the emperors; on a medal of Augustus a crocodile was painted as one of the symbols of Egypt as in fig. 1, the inscription AEGYPTO CAPTA, commemorative of his victory over Anthony, and conquest of Egypt; on several medals of Augustus is the figure of the sphinx, either alone or with an ear of corn, and the sistrum, and other symbols of this country, as in fig. 2. On one medal of Adrian, Egypt is represented as in fig. 3, under the form of a female holding the sistrum, or musical instrument used in the rites sacred to Isis. She rests on an urn full of fruits, emblematical of the fertility of the country; and an Ibis, a bird sacred in Egypt, is standing near her. On another medal of Adrian, it is represented, as in fig. 4, by the figure of the Nile, under the form of an old man lying with a cornucopia in his right hand, and resting with his left elbow on an urn, pouring out water, a hippopotamus before him, and a crocodile by his side. Very few medals of Egypt are extant without the head of an emperor. *Goltz. Numis. August. Famil.; Vaill. Numis. Roman. Imperat.; Patin. Num. Imperat. Roman.; Harduin. Num. Antiq.; Spanh. de Præst. ÆLFRED (Hist.) the same as Alfred.

ÆLFRIC (Biog.) son of an Earl of Kent, and archbishop of Canterbury, assumed the habit of the Benedictine order of monks in the monastery of Abingdon, in 955, and died in 1005. He wrote, 1. 'A Latin-Saxon Vocabulary,' published by Somner, under the title of a 'Glossary,' Oxon. 1659. 2. 'Latin Colloquies.' 3. 'The Historical Books of the Old Testament,' translated into Saxon, Oxford, 1698. 4. A charge entitled 'Canons,' preserved in Spelman's Councils in 980-7. 5. 'Homilies translated from the Latin Fathers.' 6. 'A Grammar.' 7. 'A Supplement to his Homilies.'

ÆLIA, gens (Hist.) a patrician family of Rome. [Vide Ælius.]

ÆLIA (Hist.) the wife of Sylla. Plut. in Syll.

ÆLIA, Petina, the wife of Claudius Caesar, whom he repudiated to make way for Messalina. Suet. in Claud. c. 26; Tacit. Annal. l. 12, c. 1, 2.

ÆLIA, Catulla, a noble and rich matron, who, at the age of 80, danced at the games instituted by Nero. Dio. l. 61.

ÆLIA, vide Eudocia, Euphemia, Flacilla, Pulcheria, and Verina.

ÆLIA, gens (Numis.) different branches of this family are distinguished in medals, as the Pæti, Lamie, Tuberones, Cati, &c. The annexed cut represents on the obverse the civic crown between two branches of laurel, with the inscription OB. CIVIS. SERVATOS. in honour of Augustus, to whom the senate alluded in these words; on the reverse, the words circumscribed Quintus ÆLIUS Lucii Filius LAMIA III. VIR.

Aere Argento Auro Feriundo Flando; at the bottom Senatus Consulto. The Ælius here referred to, who is supposed to be the grandson of Cicero's friend, was a monetal triumvir, i. e. an officer of the mint, who coined the copper money by order of the senate, whence the medals of this family bear the figures of the scorpion, gryffon, and beetle, the customary marks on monetal coins, and supposed to be mint marks, as also those of the Dioscuri and Jupiter, Lucina, &c.; which are so frequently to be met with on consular medals, or the medals of the Roman families. In the inscriptions the name is sometimes spelt ALLIUS, and sometimes ÆLIUS, as SEX. ALLIUS Q. F. CATUS AED. CUR. SEX. ÆLIUS CATUS II. VIR. A. A. A. F. F. &c. Goltz. in Fast.; Vaill. Num. Famil.; Morcl. Num. Fam. &c.

ÆLIA, Capitolina (Geog.) a name given to Jerusalem by the emperor Adrian, who sent a Roman colony thither. It was called Ælia, after his own family, and Capitolina, from Jupiter Capitolinus, to whom it was consecrated. Dion. Cass. l. 69, in Hadr.; Spartian. in Hadr.; Vit. Adrian.; Hieron. ad Paulin. ep. 13.

ÆLIA, Capitolina (Numis.) this town is known by the medals of different emperors, as Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Marcus Aurelius, and Verus. A medal of Adrian represents on the reverse, as in the annexed cut, a temple in which Jupiter is sitting between two figures that are standing: the inscription, COLONIA ÆLIA CAPITOLINA. *Vaillant. ÆMILIUS REGILIUS, L., a prætor, obtained a naval triumph over Antiochus. Liv. l. 37, c. 31.

ÆMILIUS LEPIDUS, M., was twice consul and augur. At his death his three sons exhibited funeral games in honour of him for three days, during which 22 couple of gladiators were engaged. Liv. l. 23, c. 30.

ÆMILIUS REGILLUS, M., a flamen quirinalis, and flamen mar-tialis, was also proposed as consul, but not finally elected. Liv. l. 24, &c.

ÆMILIUS NUMIDA, M., a decemvir of the sacred rites, U. C. 541, died within the period of his office. Liv. l. 26, c. 23.

ÆMILIUS PAPPUS, M., died when he was chief curio, U. C. 542.

ÆMILIUS SCAURUS, M., was of a noble family, but so poor that they were obliged to maintain themselves by selling coals. He rose, however, by his eloquence, to be twice consul, and once princeps senatus, after which he was sent against Jugurtha, from whom he was accused of receiving a bribe, but acquitted of the charge. Sallust, however, describes him to be "Homo nobilis, impiger, factiosus, audax, sed vitia sua callidè occultans, cum esset vir consularis, et in senatu princeps, ab eo mittitur ad Jugurtham orator, ut eum ab oppugnatione Certe, et obsidione Adherbalis amoveret." Sallust. in Jugurth.; Cic. in Brut. c. 5; Ascon. in Cic. pro Scaur.; Plin. l. 36, c. 15; Val. Max. l. 4, c. 4; Aurel. Vict. de Illust. Vir.

ÆMILIUS SCAURUS, M., an orator who flourished about 100 years B. C. and wrote orations, three books to L. Fufidius, and an account of his life, which Cicero describes as "sane utiles quos nemo legit."

ÆMILIUS SCAURUS, M., son of the preceding, and son-in-law to Sylla, built a splendid theatre. A farther account of him is given under Numismatics. [Vide Æmilia gens] Ascon. in Cic. Orat. pro Scaur. Plin. l. 33, c. 15, &c.

ÆMILIUS LEPIDUS, M., twice consul, once censor and pontifex maximus six times, princeps senatus, and guardian to Ptolemy Epiphanes, in the name of the Roman people; was, accordi; to Valerius Maximus, one of the most distinguished of the family of the Æmilii. He it was to whom a statue was erected when a youth of 15, for having saved the life of a citizen, and to which allusion is made in the medals of this Æmilius. [Vide Æmilia gens under Numismatics] Liv. l. 41, c. 22; Epit. l. 48.

ÆSCULAPIDES (Myth.) a patronymic for the descendants of Æsculapius, of whom Hippocrates was the most distinguished.

ÆSCULAPIUS (Myth.) Αἰσκληπίος; according to Cicero there were three of this name.

ÆSCULAPIUS, son of Apollo by Coronis of Phlegias, who was the god of medicine.

Hom. Hymn. in Æsculap.

*Ἰγτῆρα νόσων Αἰσκληπιὸν ἀρχομ' αἰδεῖν
Ἰὼν Ἀπόλλωνος, τὸν ἐγένετο δῖα Κορωνίς.*

He is surnamed Φιλόλαος, Philolaus, or a lover of the people, from his healing art; Ἰορτυνίος from being worshipped particularly at Gortyna; Κοτυλίως, Cotyleus, from the cure he effected on the thigh of Hercules. His mother was killed by Apollo out of jealousy, but the child was taken alive from the womb.

Pind. in Pyth. od. 3.

Παῖδ' ἐκ νεκρῶ

Ἄρπασε.

Jupiter afterwards killed him by a thunderbolt.

Virg. Æn. l. 7, v. 772.

*Ipsæ repertorem medicinæ talis et artis
Fulmine Phœbigenam Stygiæ detrusit ad undas.*

A further account of him may be found under Numismatics. Plato in Phædor.; Polyb. l. 1, c. 18, &c.; Apollod. l. 3, c. 10; Diod. l. 4; Palæophat. c. 27; *Cic. de Nat. ÆSCULAPIUS, a brother of Mercury, who, according to Cicero, was killed by a thunderbolt, and buried at Cynosura. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3, c. 22.

ÆSCULAPIUS, son of Arsippus and Arsinoë, who improved the art of medicine. Ibid.

ÆSCULAPIUS, author of a mathematical work mentioned by Vossius. Voss. Hist. Math. part 2, c. 50, § 10.

ÆSCULAPIUS (Numis.) is represented mostly, as in fig. 1, under the form of an old man, with a beard, holding a staff, round which a serpent is entwined. Sometimes like a beardless youth, as in fig. 2, on a medal of Caracalla, where an ox is offering him his foot, the inscription above DEO. Æsculapio SUBVENIENTI, i. e. the god Æsculapius assisting; underneath Colonia Gemella Juliana Hadriana Paria. Sometimes he is represented under the form of the serpent twined round a staff without the man, as in a ÆSONIUS (Geog.) an inhabitant of Æson.

ÆSOPUS (Biog.) Αἰσωπος; there were several of this name. ÆSORUS, Æsop, a Phrygian slave in the time of Cræsus, king of Lydia, who procured his freedom by the power of his genius. To him is ascribed the invention of fables, although Quintilian observes that Hesiod first adopted that mode of instruction. Plut. in Solon.; Aul. Gell. l. 2, c. 29; Quintil. l. 1, c. 9.

ÆSORUS, Claudius, a tragedian, was very intimate with Cicero, whom he instructed in the art of elocution.

Horat. l. 2, Epist. 1, calls him gravis.

Quæ gravis Æsopus, quæ doctus Roscius egit.

His son was distinguished for his extravagance.

Horat. l. 2, sat. 3, v. 239.

*Filius Æsopi detractam ex aure Metella,

ÆTHICUS, Ister (Biog.) a geographer mentioned by Cassiodorus, Orosius, and Flodoard. To him is ascribed the Notitia Imperii. Cassiod. in Chron.; Oros. Hist. l. 1, c. 2; Flodoard. Hist. Rhem. Eccles. l. 1, c. 1; Isidor. Orig. l. 14, c. 10; Voss. de Hist. Lat. l. 3, c. 1.

ÆTHIOPIA (Geog.) so called from Αἰθιοπία, i. e. incendium, burning; because it was supposed to lie under the torrid zone. Homer describes the inhabitants as to their situation, ἔσχατοι ἀνδρῶν, the remotest of men; and as to their manners Αἰθιοπῆας ἀμύμονας, the blameless Æthiopians. According to Isidor, they derive their origin from Cush, the son of Ham חַם, chush, signifying blackness; by Bochart they derive their name from Lud. Ethiopia was divided into two parts, viz. Æthiopia sub Egypto, according to Ptolemy, lying between the Nile and the Gulf of Arabia; and Æthiopia ultra Æquatorem, which was almost unknown to the ancients. The chief towns of Ethiopia were Ptolemais, Adule, Meroe, Morylon, &c. Hom. Odys. l. 1, v. 23; Il. l. 1, v. 424; Herodot. l. 2, c. 301; *Apollon. ÆTIUS, Sicanus (Biog.) a physician, from whose writings the book ascribed to Ætius De An. Bile. is said to have been collected.

ÆTIUS, the heresiarch, was also a physician. [Vide Ætius, under Ecclesiastical History]

ÆTIUS, a physician of Amida, who flourished about the beginning of the fifth century, and wrote, among other things, a work on medicine entitled, 'Tetrabiblos,' the first eight books of which, in Greek, were printed at Venice by the heirs of Aldus Manutius, fol. 1534; the remainder is still preserved in MS. in the libraries of Vienna and Paris. Of Latin editions there have been several, namely, one the translation of Janus Cornarius, under the title of 'Contractæ ex veteribus Medicinæ Tetrabiblos,' 8vo. Venice, 1543; fol. Bas. 1542, 1549; another translated by J. B. Montanus, fol. Bas. 1543; two at Lyons, fol. 1549; and four vols. 12mo. 1560; with the notes of Hugo de Solerus, and one at Paris, fol. 1567, among the 'Medicæ Artis Principes.'

ÆTNA (Geog.) a mountain of Sicily, now Monte Gibello, famed for its volcanic eruptions, which Pindar calls, on account of its great height, κίων ἄρavia, a celestial pillar. It derives its name from the Hebrew, סורנאז, surnaz, a furnace; and Αἴτνα, from αἶθω, to burn; to which Virgil and Ovid allude, Virg. Georg. l. 1, v. 472.

Quoties Cyclopus effervere in agros,
Vidimus undantem ruptis fornacibus Ætnam,
Flammæarumque globos, liquefactaque volvere saxa.

Ovid. Met. l. 15, v. 340.

Ne quæ sulfureis ardet fornacibus Ætna
Ignea semper erit, neque enim fuit ignea semper:
Nam sive est animal tellus, et vivit lubetque
Spiramenta locis flammam exhalantia multis.

The first eruption mentioned in history is that which, according to Diodorus, happened before the Trojan war; those which have been repeated at intervals for upwards of 2000 years have been the theme of the poets from the time of Pindar to that of Cornelius Severus, who wrote an entire poem on the subject.

The Origin of these Eruptions according to the Poets.

The origin of these eruptions is ascribed by the poets to the rebellious war waged by the giant Typho, or Enceladus and his companions, against Jupiter, who thrust them down into Tartarus, and placed Mount Ætna over them.

ÆTNA (Geog.) Αἰτνῆ, a town at the foot of Mount Ætna, which was first called Catana, but Hiero having expelled the Catanenses from that part, gave the name of Ætna to it, or, as it was sometimes called, according to Diodorus, Ἐρνησία, and to Strabo Ἰρνησα. It is now named Mascali. The inhabitants were called by Thucydides Ἰρνησῦντοι, by Cicero and Pliny, Ætenses. Thucyd. l. 6; Cic. in Ferr. act. iii. c. 8; Diodor. l. 11; Strab. l. 6; Plin. l. 3, c. 8.

ÆTNA (Numis.) some medals struck by the Ætenses represent a cornucopia, as symbolical of the fertility of the country; others represent a head of Apollo radiated, or of Ceres, with the inscription ΑΙΤΝΑΙΩΝ, or ΑΙΤΝΑΩΝ. Haverkamp. Parula. Sicil. Discritt. Tab. 133; Harduin. Numis. Vet. Pop.; Pellerin. Recueil. de Med. des Peup. &c.; Hunter Numis. Vet. Pop. &c.

ÆTNEUS (Myth.) Αἰτναῖος, son of Prometheus, and one of the Cabiri mentioned by Paus. l. 9.

ÆTENSES (Geog.) the inhabitants of Ætna.

ÆTOLI (Geog.) Ætoliāns; the inhabitants of Ætolia. [Vide Ætolia]

ÆTOLI, campi (Geog.) another name for Apulia, so called after Diomed, who was called the Ætolius heros. Sil. Ital. l. 1, v. 125.

ÆTOLIA (Geog.) Αἰτωλία, a country in the middle of Greece, which takes its name from Ætolus; Stephanus derives the word ἀπὸ τῆς αἰτεῖν ὅλον, from seeking every thing, because the Ætoliāns were a covetous narrow-minded people. Their chief towns were as follow:

Chief Towns of Ætolia.

Chalcis,	Ephyri,
Arachthe,	Dolopes,
Olene,	Temphæi,
Calydon,	Ænienses,
Majares,	Athamanes, &c.

They were formidable enemies to the Romans, till conquered by Fulvius. Polyb. l. 4, &c.; Liv. l. 26, c. 24, &c.; Strabo, l. 7; Plin. l. 4, c. 2; Mela, l. 2, c. 3; Plut. in Flam. Flor. l. 2, c. 9; Paus. l. 5, c. 1, &c.

ÆTOLIA (Numis.) had medals which were common to the whole country, independently of those struck by its several towns. On its earlier medals are represented Hercules killing a centaur; and the head of Hercules in a lion's skin. The boar is also frequently represented, emblematical of the Calydonian boar; and frequently a head of Apollo, with the lyre; the legends ΑΙΤΩΛ. ΑΙΤΩΛΩΝ. sometimes with the name of the magistrate.

ÆTOLIUS (Myth.) Αἰτωλός, son of Endymion and Iphianissa, who, having accidentally killed Apis, fled and settled in Ætolia, to which he gave his name. Apollod. l. 1, c. 7, &c. [Vide Ætolia]

ÆTOLUS, son of Oxyllus, and king of Elis, died while young. l. 5.

ÆVITERNI (Myth.) the gods so called by the heathens, because they existed for ever; to whom, according to Pliny, they sacrificed red oxen. Apul. de Deo Socrat.

dals bears on the obverse, as in fig. 4, two eagles standing on a hare, one with its head erect, and the other in the act of attacking it; on the reverse a man in a chariot and four, whom the goddess Victoria is flying towards with a triumphal crown, to commemorate a victory obtained by Gelo the tyrant of Syracuse over the Carthaginians, by the assistance of Theron, his father-in-law, and ruler of Agrigentum. The inhabitants of this city honoured on their medals Jupiter, Apollo, Minerva, Hercules, and Æsculapius; but more particularly Ceres and Proserpine, whom they commonly represented crowned with ears of corn, to denote the fertility of the island. They likewise represented their river Agragas under the form of a youth, whom they worshipped as the son of Jupiter, by Asterope, the daughter of Oceanus. The inscriptions on the medals of Agrigentum were sometimes an abbreviation of the names of the town, as A. K. as in fig. 3, AKPA. AKPAT. AKPAFAN, as in fig. 1, AKPANTI, as in fig. 4, ΑΙΤΑΓΑΝΤΟΣ, as in fig. 1; but most commonly at full length ΑΙΤΑΓΑΝΤΙΝΩΝ, or ΑΙΤΑΓΑΝΤΙΝΩΝ; and in those which represent the river Agragas, ΑΡΑΓΑΣ, or in most others ΑΙΤΑΓΑΣ. *Goltz. AGRIOPAS, the father of Cynaras, who invented tiles, metals, &c. Plin. l. 7, c. 56.

AGRIOPE (Myth.) 'Αγριόπη, the wife of Agenor, who is otherwise called Telephesus.

AGRIPPA (Bibl.) a king of the Jews, before whom the apostle Paul preached, and the second king of that name mentioned under History. Acts xxv. &c.

AGRIPPA (Hist.) a name common to several princes and distinguished persons. The name is supposed to be derived from Ægro partu, because those who came into the world with their feet foremost were called Agrippæ. Plin. l. 7, c. 8; Gell. l. 16, c. 16; Non. Marcellin. c. 19; Salmas. Exercit. Plinæar. 631.

Princes of this Name.

AGRIPPA, Silvius, king of the Latins, succeeded Tiberius, A. M. 3133, A. C. 902, and reigned forty years. Dionys. Halic. l. 1.

AGRIPPA, Herod, the first of this name, son of Aristobulus, and grandson of Herod the Great, obtained the kingdom of Judea from Caligula, and died by the visitation of God, a miserable death, after a reign of seven years, A. D. 43. Acts xii. 22. Juvenal refers to his incestuous connexion with his sister Berenice. Juven. Sat. 6, v. 156.

— Deinde adamas notissimus et Berenice
In digito factus pretiosior, hunc dedit olim
Barbarus incesta, dedit hunc Agrippa sororis,
Observant ubi festa, mero pede abbata reges,
Et vetus indulget senibus clementia porcis.

Josèph. Jud. Antiq. l. 2, c. 8; Dio. l. 59.

AGRIPPA II, son of the preceding, and last king of the Jews, was at the siege of Jerusalem with Titus. He it was before whom Paul pleaded. Joseph. Antiq. l. 19, 20; de Bell. Jud. l. 2; Tac. Annal. Hist. l. 5, c. 1; Dio. l. 66.

Distinguished Persons of this Name.

AGRIPPA, Menenius, a consul. [Vide Menenius]

AGRIPPA, Furius, a consul with T. Quinctius Capitolinus, U. C. 310, A. C. 444. Liv. l. 3, c. 66.

AGRIPPA, Menenius Lanatus, a consul. [Vide Menenius]

AGRIPPA, M. Vipsanius, the favourite and son-in-law of Augustus, was three times consul, as many times tribune, and once censor with Augustus. After having achieved many exploits by sea, and written an account of his own life, which is not now extant, he died twelve years before the birth of our Saviour. A farther account of this Agrippa is given under Numismatics. Vell. Tacit. Annal. l. 1, c. 1, &c. Paler. Hist. l. 2; Sueton. in August. c. 63; Dio. l. 49, &c.; Plin. l. 34, &c.; Joseph. Antiq.

AGRIPPA, Posthumus, son of the preceding, was born after the decease of his father, adopted by Augustus, U. C. 756; banished shortly after on account of his vicious courses, and put to death by Tiberius, on his coming to the empire, A. D. 14. Tac. Annal. l. 1; Sueton. in Tiber. c. 22; Dio. l. 57.

AGRIPPA, or the false Agrippa, a slave of the preceding, whose real name was Cleoment, gave himself out to be Agrippa Posthumus, whom Tiberius had put to death. The emperor found means to get him into his power, when he caused him to be secretly despatched. Tac. Annal. l. 2, c. 39; Dio. l. 57.

AGRIPPA, D. Haterius, a relation of Germanicus, was successively a tribune of the people, a pretor, and a consul; Tacitus describes him as a great debauchee. Tac. Annal. l. 1, c. 57.

AGRIPPA, M. Asinius, was consul with Cassus Cornelius, A. D. 25. Tac. Annal. l. 4, c. 34.

AGRIPPA, Vibulanus, a Roman knight, poisoned himself in the presence of his judges, from whom he was taken to prison, and there strangled, in the reign of Tiberius. Tac. Annal. l. 6, c. 40; Dio. l. 58.

AGRIPPA, Fonteius, an accuser of Scribonius Libo, in the reign of Tiberius. Tacit. Annal. l. 2, c. 30.

AGRIPPA, Fonteius, probably the same as the preceding, was killed by the Sarmatians, while he was governor of Sarmatia, during the civil war between Vitellius and Vespasian. Tac. Hist. l. 3, c. 46; Joseph.

AGRIPPA (Numis.) the two kings of Judæa of this name struck medals in honour of the emperors by whom they were befriended.

AGRIPPA I, struck some medals bearing on the obverse the heads of Caligula and Claudius, with a suitable inscription; on the reverse ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΙΑΣ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ. Cæsareæ Asyli, Agrippa Rex, or ΕΠΙ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ ΤΙΒΕΡΙΕΩΝ. sub rege Agrippa, Tiberiensium. A few of his medals are also said to bear on the obverse the head of Agrippa crowned with a diadem, inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ΜΕΓΑΣ, ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ ΦΙΛΟΚΛΑΥΔΙΟΥΣ. Rex Magnus Agrippæ Philoclaudius; on the reverse, ΜΗΤ. ΚΑΙΣΑΡΙΑ. or ΚΑΙΣΑΡΕΙΑ. Several medals are stamped with the year of this king's reign, as ΒΑΣΙΛ. ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ. Ι'. anno tertio; others are marked L. E. ς. Z. anno 5. 6.

AGRIPPA II, struck medals, bearing on the obverse the heads of Nero, Vespasian, Titus, and Domitian, mostly with the Greek title; on the reverse, the name and title, but not the head of the king, as ΒΑ. ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ. or ΕΠΙ ΒΑ. ΑΓΡΙΠΠΑΣ. to which is added the year of his reign. On one medal of Domitian, this serves to define the precise period of time, bearing on the obverse the inscription IMP. CA. D. VES. F. DOM. AV. GER. COS. XII.; Imperator Cæsar Divi Vespasiani Filius Domitianus Augustus Germanicus Consul duodecimus; and on the reverse, SALVTI. AVGVSTI. S. C. and ΕΠΙ. ΒΑ. ΑΓΡΙ. ΕΤ. Κ. ς. sub Rege Agrippa, anno 26. Vaill. Num. Græc.; Palin. Imp.; Spasheim de Præstant. et Us. Numm.; Harduin. Herodiad.; Frochlich. Notit.

AGRIPPA, some distinguished persons of this name had also their medals; namely, Agrippa, of the Caninea gens, a duumvir of Corinth, as appears from the inscription on the reverse of a medal of Augustus Cæsar. Luceo CANINI. AGRIPPA. II. VIR. CORINTHI. Also a triumvir of the Luria gens, as M. LURIUS. AGRIPPA. III. VIR. AAA. FF. i. e. Marco Agrippa Triumviro (monetali) Auro, Argento, Aere, Flando, Fereundo: but the most distinguished individual in whose honour medals were struck as for a prince, was the Marcus Agrippa, of the gens Vipsania, who has been noticed under the head of History.

He is commonly represented as in the annexed figure, with a crown made of the beaks of ships, to commemorate his naval victories; inscription Marcus AGRIPPA. Lucii Filius CONsul III.; on the reverse, a figure of Neptune, holding in his right hand a dolphin, and in his left a trident. On another medal, his consulship with his father-in-law Augustus is commemorated; bearing on the obverse the head of Cæsar crowned with laurel; inscription, AUGUSTUS CONsul XI.; on the reverse, the head of Agrippa adorned with a mural and rostral crown, the former in commemoration of his appeasing a popular tumult. [Vide Pl. XIV.] On a medal struck by the Alabandenses, he is represented, as in the annexed figure, crowned as usual, with the heads of his two sons, Caius and Lucius, opposed; inscription ΑΑΑΡΑΝΔΡΩΝ; on the reverse, the head of Augustus crowned with laurel, and that of Livia opposed. On a medal struck at Corinth, the head of Agrippa, surnamed Posthumus, his third son, is given; inscription, AGRIPPA CÆSAR; on the reverse, within a crown of parsley, Caius HEJO POLLIONE IIVIPO. Caius MUSSIDIPO IIVIPO. Vallaint. Numis. Græc.; Colon. et Imperat.; Morell. Fam.; Pemb. Mus. p. iii. tab. 47.

AGRIPPA (Biog.) a mathematician in the time of Domitian. Ptol. Abmag. l. 7, c. 3.

AGRIPPA, a sceptic philosopher, who invented five additional arguments for disputing every thing. Diogen. Laert. l. 9; Segm. 88.

AGRIPPA, surnamed Castor, wrote against the Basilides, in the second century. Euseb. Hist. l. 4, c. 7; Hieron. de Scriptor. Eccles.; Du Pin. Bibl. Des. Ant. Eccles.

AGRIPPA, Henry Corneille, of an illustrious family at Cologne, was born in 1486, and died in 1535. He distinguished himself both as a soldier and writer, and left many works on divinity, medicine, and philosophy. Paul. Jov. in Eulog. Doct. Vir.; Melch. Adam. in Vil. Germ. Medic.; Du Pin. Bibl. Ant. Eccles. du XVI Siec.

AGRIPPIAS (Numis.) a town of Judæa, which was so called by Herod, in honour of M. Agrippa, and is known by a medal bearing on the obverse the head of Livia, the wife of Augustus, or Julia, his daughter; on the reverse the prow of a ship, inscription, ΑΓΡΙΠΠΙΕΩΝ.

AGRIPPINA (Hist.) surnamed Vipsania, the daughter of Agrippa, and grand-daughter of Atticus, the friend of Cicero, was the wife of Tiberius, whom he repudiated, in order to marry Julia. Tac. Annal. l. 1, c. 12, &c.; Sueton. in Tib. c. 7; Dio. l. 54, 57.

AGRIPPINA, Julia, the daughter of M. Agrippa, granddaughter to Augustus, mother of Caligula, and wife of Germanicus, brought the ashes of her murdered husband to Rome, and placed them in the tomb of the Julian family. She was afterwards banished by the order of Tiberius to the island of Pandataria, where she starved herself to death, A. D. 37. Plin. l. 7, c. 8, &c.; Tac. l. 1, c. 22, &c.; Suet. in Tib. c. 53.

AGRIPPINA, daughter of Germanicus, by the preceding, was the mother of Nero by Domitius Ænobarbus. After a life of much cruelty and debauchery, she was stabbed by her own son Nero, A. D. 59. Plin. l. 7, &c.; Tac. l. 4, c. 75, &c.; Suet. in Claud. et in Neron. Dion. l. 62.

AGRIPPINA (Numis.) medals are extant of the two last princesses of this name, bearing their effigies. Those of Agrippina, sen. are inscribed AGRIPPINA MARCI FILIA GERMANICI CÆSARIS—

AGRIPPINA MARCI FILIA

MATER CAII CÆSARIS

AUGUSTI—AGRIPPINÆ MEMORIÆ—A-

ΓΡΙΠΠΙΝΑΝ ΘΕΑΝ ΜΥ-

ΤΙ, &c. Medals were struck in honour of this empress by the people of Mytilene, Miletos, Alexandria, Ephesus, Iona, &c. The medals of Agrippina, jun. are inscribed, AGRIPPINA AUGUSTA GERMANICI FILIA CÆSARIS AUGUSTI—AGRIPPINA AUGUSTA MATER AUGUSTI—AGRIPPINA AUG. DIVI CLAUD. NERONIS CÆS. MAT.—AΓΡΙΠΠΙΝΑ. ΣΕΒΑΣΤΗ.—ΙΟΥΛΙΑ. ΑΓΡΙΠΠΙΝΑ ΚΑΥΔΙΟΥ ΓΥΝΗ.—ΝΕΡΩΝ. ΚΑΙΣΑΡ. ΣΕΒΑΣΤ. ΑΓΡΙΠΠΕΙΝΑ. ΣΕΒΑΣΤ. This last Agrippina is represented on the reverse of a medal of Caligula, with her sisters, Drusilla and Julia, under the forms of Constancy, Concord, and Fortune; but it is doubted by most antiquaries whether this be genuine. Vail. Prest. tom. 1; Pat. Imp. Beg. Thes. Brand. tom. ii.; Harduin. Oper.; Mediol. Imp. Rom.

AGRIPPINA, Colonia (Geog.) or Agrippinensis colonia, a colony on the river Rhine, called after Agrippina, the mother of Nero, now Cologne. Tac. Hist. l. 1, c. 56.

AGRIPPINA, Colonia (Numis.) is known also by the inscription A. AGRIPPINA COLONIA on a medal of Nero and Claudius. Goltz. Thesaur. p. 237.

AGRIPPINUS (Hist.) was the son of Demetrius Alabarch, of Alexandria, and of Mariamna, daughter of Herod the Great.

AJAX (Myth.) Αἴας, there were two Grecian heroes of this name, who distinguished themselves at the siege of Troy.

AJAX, the son of Telamon, was inferior in valour and skill to Achilles only. Homer calls him by distinction Τηλεμώνιος Αἴας, and at the games in honour of Patroclus makes him to be invulnerable except in the neck, at which Diomed in his contest with him always aimed.

Il. l. 23, v. 820.

Τυδείδης δ' ἄρ' ἔπειτα ὑπὲρ σείκεος μέγαλοι
Αἴαν' ἐπ' αὐχένι κῆρε φαεινῷ θυμὸς ἄκωκ' ἔχεν καὶ τίς τε δὴ ῥ' Αἴαντι περιδείδαντες Ἀχαιοί.

At the death of Achilles he disputed with Ulysses for the honour of that hero's arms, which being given to the latter, he is said in his fury to have slain a flock of sheep, which he supposed to be Agamemnon and his friends, and then stabbed himself. Some say that he was killed by Paris, and others by Ulysses.

Pind. Nem. Od. 7.

ἰάν δ' ἀλάθειαν ἰδέμεν
ἢ κεν ὅπλων χολωθείς ὁ καρτερός Αἴας ἔπαξε διὰ φρενῶν λευρὸν ἔϊφος· ὅν κρατῖτον, Ἀχιλῆος ἄτερ, μάχῃ Ξανθῷ Μενέλα δάμαρτα κομίσαι θοαῖς ἐν ναυσὶ πόρευσαν ἐνθυ-πνός Ζεφύριον πομπαὶ
Ἦρός· ἴλας πόλιν.

Horat. l. 2, sat. 3, v. 193.

Consula. Cur Ajax heros ab Achille secundus
Putrescit, toties servatis clarus Achivis;
Gaudet ut populus Priami Priamisque inhumato,
Per quem tot juvenes patrio caruere sepulcro?
Mille ovium insanus morti dedit, inclutum Ulyssem
Et Menelaum und necum se occidere clamans.

ALASCO, John (Ecc.) A Lasco, or A Laski, usually styled the Polish Reformer, from the active part which he took in promoting the Reformation, is said to have been uncle to Sigismund, King of Poland. He was born in 1499, and died in 1560, after having suffered much for his zeal in the Protestant cause. His principal works, of which a catalogue is given by Melchior Adam, were as follow: 1. 'Brevis et Dilecta de Sacramentis Ecclesie Christi Tractatio,' &c. 8vo. London, 1552. 2. 'Confessio de nostra cum Christo Domino Communionem et Corporis item sui,' &c. 3. 'Epistola ad Bremensis Ecclesie Ministros.' 4. 'Contra Memnonem Catabaptistarum Principem.' 5. 'De Recta Ecclesiarum Instituendarum Ratione Epistole tres.' 6. 'Epistola ad Regem Poloniæ Sigismundum,' &c. 7. 'Purgatio Ministrorum in Ecclesiis Peregrinis Frænkfurtii,' &c. 8. 'Responsio ad Virulentum Calumniisque et Mendacii Consarcinatum Joachimi Westphali Epistolam,' &c. 9. 'Formula Ratio totius Ecclesiastici Ministerii Edwardi VI, in Peregrinorum maxime Germanorum Ecclesia.' 10. A Form of Prayer for his Church at London, 1556.

ALASCO, Albertus, descended from the same family, was magnificently entertained by the University of Oxford in 1583, being, as Wood says, one tam Marti quam Mercurio, "A very good soldier and a very good scholar, an able linguist, philosopher, and mathematician."

ALASTOR (Myth.) 'Αλάτωρ, one of Sarpedon's armour-bearers, slain by Ulysses.

ALBANI (Hist.) the name of a Roman family which was originally of Urbino, and gave birth to Pope Clement XI, besides several princes and prelates.

ALBANI, John Jerom (Ecc.) son of Count Albani, was created a cardinal in 1570 by Pope Pius V, and died in 1591. He wrote, 1. 'De Immunitate Ecclesiarum,' dedicated to Julian III, 1553. 2. 'De Potestate Papæ et Concilii,' Lyons, 1558. 3. 'De Donatione Constantini.' 4. 'De Cardinalibus,' &c.

ALBANI, Francis, a pope under the name of Clement XI. [Vide Clement XI]

ALBANI, Annibal, nephew of the preceding, was made cardinal by his uncle in 1711, and was member of the conclave which elected Clement XII. He edited the works of his uncle, and wrote an epistle dedicatory to the cardinals.

ALBANI, Alexander, another nephew of the pope, was born in 1692, sent as extraordinary nuncio to the emperor Charles V, made cardinal by Innocent XIII in 1721, and died in 1779. He was a great virtuoso, and made a collection of drawings consisting of three hundred volumes, which were sold to his majesty George III for 14,000 crowns. He also wrote some historical and literary pieces.

ALBANI, John Francis, nephew to the preceding, was born in 1720, advanced to the purple in 1747, and died in 1808. He was a great patron of learning and learned men, and increased the library of his uncle to nearly 80,000 volumes. The latter part of his life was embittered by the loss of his villa, and all his valuable possessions, which were either taken or destroyed by the republican plunderers.

ALBANI, Barthelemy (Bâg.) an Italian physician of Bergamo, wrote a treatise 'De Balneis Fransherii.'

ALBANI, John, a physician of Bologna in the 17th century, was the author of a book entitled 'De Syllogismo Aristotelico,' and a treatise entitled 'De Convalescentibus.'

ALBANIA (Geog.) 'Αλβανία, a country on the shore of the Caspian Sea, in Asia, which was so called from the colour of the people's hair; it is now known by the name of Chippiche, which is a part of Georgia.

ALBANIA, a province of European Turkey, situated on the Adriatic Sea, comprehending the ancient Illyria and Epirus. The principal towns of Albania are as follow:

ALBANII (Geog.) a nation who pretended to be descended from the Greeks, who have occupied Egypt since the time of Alexander. They have no fixed place of abode, but live by ravaging the country of the Nubians and Abyssinians.

ALBANO, Francesco (Biog.) or Francis, a painter of Bologna, was born in 1660, and died in 1758. Among his works, which were much admired, are 'The Three Marys at the Sepulchre,' 'A Holy Family with Angels,' 'The Four Elements,' &c.

ALBANO, John, the brother and scholar of the preceding, followed his style of painting in general, but excelled in landscapes.

ALBANO, Nepi de, a lawyer, wrote a treatise on evidence.

ALBANO (Geog.) an old town of Latium, which is situated in the Campagna di Roma, and was anciently called Albanum, being built either on the ruins of Alba Longa, or in their vicinity. It has an aqueduct still in good preservation, which is said to have been erected 398 years before the Christian era. The town is at present small.

ALBANOPOLIS (Geog.) the former capital of Albania, now Albanopoli, a poor mean place.

ALBANS, St., Duke of (Her.) a title conferred by Charles II on his natural son, whom he had by Eleanor Gwynn. He gave him the name of Beauclerk, and created him baron Heddington, and earl of Burford, Dec. 27, 1676; duke of St. Albans, Jan. 10, 1684; and baron Vere, March 28, 1750. The arms, &c. of this family are follow:

Arms. Those of king Charles II, with a baton sinister, gules charged with three roses argent, seeded and barbed proper.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, turned up ermine, a lion statant guardant or, crowned with a ducal coronet per pale argent and gules, and gorged with a collar gules, charged with three roses argent, seeded and barbed proper. Supporters. On the dexter side, an antelope argent, gorged as the crest, armed and anguled, or; on the sinister, a greyhound argent, gorged and unguled as the other. Motto. "Auspiciis melioris evi."

ALBANS, St. (Geog.) a borough in Hertfordshire, the ancient Verulam of the Romans, which received its modern name from a magnificent monastery founded by Offa in the eighth century in honour of St. Alban, the protomartyr of Britain. [See Alban.] Besides the remains of that saint, those of Offa, and Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, the youngest son of Henry IV, were buried here, with many others. Offa provided the monastery with about 100 monks, which was richly endowed by Pope Adrian IV. It is 13 miles W. S.W. of Hertford, 21 N. N.W. London. Lat. 51° 46' N. long. 0° 21' W.

ALBANUM (Geog.) a town of Latium, built either on the ruins of Alba Longa, or in their vicinity, now Albano. ALBANUS (Geog.) a mountain and lake of Latium, near Albanum, now called Monte Albano, and the lake Lago di Castel Gandolfo. The Latina Ferie were celebrated with great solemnity on this mountain, which Horace makes the seat of the Muses, l. 2, ep. 1, v. 27.

Dicitur Albanos musas in sacre locutas.

Numa is also said to have received her communications from the goddess Egéria. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Liv. l. 1, c. 3; Strab. l. 5; Plut. in Numa.

ALBANY, Robert, Duke of (Hist.) son of Robert II, was appointed regent of Scotland in 1389 in consequence of the age and infirmities of the king; and again on the death of king Robert II, his nephew, king James, being a prisoner in England. He died in 1419, at the age of 80, after an active life, which had been principally employed in administering the government of the kingdom.

ALBANY, Murdoch, second duke of, and son of the preceding, succeeded his father in his title, and also in his dignity of regent, when he procured the release of his cousin, king James I, from captivity, in 1424; but, being tried in 1425 on a charge of high treason, together with his two sons and his father-in-law, the earl of Lennox, they were all found guilty, and beheaded.

ALBANY, Alexander, Duke of, son of king James II, was imprisoned by his brother, James III; but, escaping from his prison, he went first to France, and afterwards to England, where he entered into a treasonable agreement with king Edward IV, that if he would place him on the Scottish throne, he would pay him homage, and give him up some places. A temporary reconciliation between the brothers prevented the execution of this project; but Albany having afterwards renewed his treasonable agreement with Edward, retired into England, and was at length killed at Paris in 1485 by the splinter of a lance at the tournament between the Duke of Orleans and another knight.

ALBANY, John, Duke of, son of the preceding, was invited in 1514 to assume the regency of Scotland during the minority of king James V, after being restored to the honours and estates which his father had forfeited, but he retained this dignity not more than eight years, during which period he entirely lost his popularity in Scotland, and retiring to France, he attended Francis I in his expedition into Italy, and died in 1536.

ALBANY, Duke of (Her.) a Scotch royal title enjoyed at present by his royal highness the duke of York, and first conferred on the regent Robert, earl of Fife, son of Robert II above-mentioned.

ALBATEGNI (Biog.) or in Latin Albatenus, whose proper name was Mahammed Ben Geber, surnamed Albatani, was, according to Abulpharagius, a native of Harran, and, as an astronomer, deserved to be called the Ptolemy of Arabia. He wrote in Arabic a work entitled 'De Scientia Stellarum Liber,' 4to. Bonon. 1645, which was translated with additions and demonstrations by Regiomontanus from the original, which is in the Vatican.

ALBEMARLE, Arnold Joost, Earl of, (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, attended king William into England, in 1688, as page of honour, and after distinguishing himself by his courage and fidelity during several campaigns, he was honoured by the special confidence and favour of his sovereign during his life. At his death he retired to his native country, Holland, where he enjoyed high posts in the state, and after serving with distinction under Marlborough, he died in 1718, in the 48th year of his age.

ALBEMARLE, William Anne, second Earl of, was early engaged in the military service, and being invested with the command of the troops sent to the Netherlands, he behaved with great gallantry at the battle of Dettingen. He afterwards served in the campaign of 1744, and in 1745 was wounded at the battle of Fontenoy. In 1746 he had the command of the right wing at the battle of Culloden, after which he was left as commander-in-chief of all his majesty's forces in the north. On the conclusion of peace, he was sent as ambassador and plenipotentiary to the French Court, where he died in 1754.

ALBEMARLE, George, third Earl of, and son of the preceding, was born in 1724, and died in 1772, after having distinguished himself in the military service, particularly in the reduction of the Havannah, where he was commander-in-chief.

ALBEMARLE, Duke of (Her.) the title granted to general Monk by Charles II, July 7, 1660, in consideration of his services in bringing about the restoration. It became extinct at the death of his son Christopher, second duke.

ALBEMARLE, Earl of, one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Keppel, of whom honourable mention is made under History. [Vide Albemarle and Keppel] The titles, arms, &c. of this family, are as follow:

Titles. Keppel, earl of Albemarle, in Normandy, viscount Bury, in the county of Lancashire, and baron Ashford, of Ashford, in the county of Kent. The title commonly borne by the eldest son is viscount Bury.

Arms. Gules, three escallop shells argent.

Crest. In a ducal coronet or, a swan's neck proper.

Supporters. Two lions ducally crowned or.

Motto. "Ne cede malis."

ALBENAS, John Pallio d' (Biog.) a lawyer and antiquary of Nismes, and son of James Albenas, also an antiquary, and the first consul of that city, was born in 1524, and died in 1563, leaving 'Discours Historial de l'Antique et Illustre Cité de Nismes,' fol. Lyons, 1557; besides a translation into French of the work of Julian, archbishop of Toledo, entitled, 'Prognosticorum, sive de Origine Mortis Humanæ,' &c.; and of Æneas Sylvius's 'Histoire des Tabornes.'

ALBERGATI, Nicholas (Ecc.) a cardinal, with the title of the holy cross, was born at Bologna, in 1375, was made cardinal by Martin V, sent as a legate into Germany into 1431, and died in 1448.

ALBERGATI, Fabio (Biog.) a native of Bologna in the 16th century, was the author of, 1. 'El Cardinale,' 4to. Bologna, 1599. 2. 'Trattato del Modi di ridurre a Paco l'Inimicitie Private,' 8vo. Venice, 1614. In 1573 Zanetti published at Rome six volumes of Albergati's moral works.

ALBERGOTTI, Marcellinus (Ecc.) bishop of Arezzo, rendered great services to pope Innocent IV, as legate to the Marquisate of Ancona, against the emperor, Frederic II.

ALBERGOTTI, John, another bishop of Arezzo, whom Gregory XI employed against Galeas Visconti, duke of Milan. These are of the same family as those which follow under the article of Biography.

ALBERGOTTI, Francis (Biog.) a lawyer, and son of Alberic Rosiati, a celebrated lawyer, was born at Arezzo, and died at Florence in 1376. He wrote, 'Commentaries on the Digest,' &c., and on some books of the civil code, &c. His son was also distinguished in the profession of the law; and others, of the same name, obtained an honourable distinction, as is mentioned above.

ALBERIC (Hist.) marquis of Tuscany, and a powerful patrician at Rome in the 10th century, revolted and stood a siege against Hugh Capet, with whom he was afterwards reconciled. He died about 590.

ALBERIC (Ecc.) a bishop of Langres, was present at the assembly of Aix la Chapelle in the ninth century, as one of the envoys of the prince.

ALBERIC, a cardinal of the 11th century, was employed in the synod held at Rome under Gregory IX, to dispute against the heretic Berenger. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Liber Dictaminum et Salutationum.' 2. 'De Musica Dialogus.' 3. 'Hymni de Paschate,' &c. &c.

ALBERIC, abbot of the monastery of Cistercian monks, died in 1109, so distinguished for his piety that he was enrolled among the number of the saints.

ALBERIC, archbishop of Bourges, died in 1140, after having taken an active part in the affairs of his time.

ALBERIC, a cardinal and bishop of Ostia, was present as legate from Innocent II, in a council held at London in 1138: after which he was sent as legate, by Eugene III, to Sicily, to the East, and finally to France. He died in 1147.

ALBERIC, archbishop of Rheims, distinguished himself for his zeal against the Saracens, Albigenses, and all infidels and heretics. He was taken prisoner in Portugal, but rescued by the knights of Calatrava, and died at Pavia in 1218.

ALBERIC (Biog.) vide Albert.

ALBERIC, or Albrice, a native of London, flourished about 1217, and was the author of many works, as 'Virtutes Antiquorum;' 'Canones Speculativi;' 'De Origine Deorum;' &c.

ALBERIC, a Cistercian monk of Trois-Fontaines, in the diocese of Chalons, in Champagne, was a poet and historian. He wrote Chronicles from the commencement of the World to 1241. The time in which he lived is unknown.

ALBERIC, Veer, a regular of the order of Augustines, and of the family of the earl of Oxford, in 1250 wrote 'A Treatise on the Eucharist;' 'The Life of St. Ositha;' 'A History of the Antiquities of his Monastery,' which bore the name of this saint.

ALBERIC, surnamed Thosanus, a Cistercian monk of Thoson, in Flanders, lived in 1272, and was the author of Chronicles, containing the History of the Crusade of Lewis the Younger, entitled, 'Vox de Cælo,' &c.

ALBERIC, surnamed de Rosata, or Roxiati, was a distinguished lawyer in 1350, and wrote on the sixth book of the Decretals. To him also is attributed a dictionary of law, and a treatise 'De Statutis.'

ALBERIC, James, a hermit of the order of Augustines, and a native of Bergamo, published, in 1605, 'A Catalogue of the Illustrious Men of Venice.'

ALBERIZZI, Peter Joseph (Biog.) a physician of Milan, died in 1722, at the age of 33. He was the author of a posthumous work, entitled, 'Critologia Medica de Causis Luis Pestiferæ,' &c.

ALBERMONT, Frederic (Biog.) published, in 1675, a treatise, entitled, 'Symmetria Juridica Austriaca.'

ALBERONI, Julius (Hist.) the son of a gardener, of Placentia, was born in 1666, and rose by his intrigues and his talents to be a cardinal and prime minister of Spain. He projected the match between the king of Spain and the daughter of the duke of Parma, which, through his intrigues, was put into execution. He then attempted to em-broil Spain with France, England, Naples, and Sicily, in which he partly succeeded, but at length brought himself into disgrace, was banished from the kingdom, and after being made legate of Romagna by Clement XII, died at Placentia in 1782.

ALBERT (Hist.) a name common to many princes and illustrious persons.

Emperors of this Name.

ALBERT I, surnamed the Triumphant, son of Rudolphus I, was elected emperor of Germany on the deposition and death of Adolphus, whom he killed in battle with his own hand, in 1298. He was assassinated in 1308, by his nephew, John, duke of Suabia, and other conspirators, and was succeeded by Henry VII. It was during the reign of this emperor that the Swiss regained their independence, and laid the foundation of the Helvetic League. Bon. Fin. l. 3, dec. 4. The effigies of this and the following emperor are given, as in the annexed figures.

ALBERT II, surnamed the Grave and the Magnanimous, the son of Albert IV, duke of Austria, was elected emperor in 1438, as also king of Hungary and Bohemia, and died after a short but useful reign of a year and seven months. Aventin. Ann. Boior. l. 7; Æn. Silv. Hist. Bohem. c. 56; Krantz. Sax. l. 7, c. 41; Spondan. Annal. ann. 1437, &c.

Kings of Poland and Sweden.

ALBERT, vide John Albert.

ALBERT, second duke of Mecklenburg, and son of Albert, was chosen king of Sweden in 1363, on the deposition of Magnus II; but falling under the displeasure of the nobility, by whom he had been raised to the throne, they supported Margaret, daughter of Waldemar, king of Denmark, who conquered him in battle, and taking him prisoner, refused to set him at liberty till he renounced all pretensions to the crown for himself and his son. Albert died in 1412, after a reign of 23 years. Joh. Magn. l. 21.

Dukes of Austria.

ALBERT I, who was afterwards emperor, was first invested by his father, Rudolphus, with the duchy of Austria.

ALBERT II, surnamed the Wise, died in 1358, after having governed his people with much prudence, notwithstanding his bodily infirmities.

ALBERT III, was surnamed the Astrologer, because he was addicted to that study. He rebuilt the University of Vienna, and died in 1390.

ALBERT IV, surnamed the Patient, succeeded his father in 1390, and died of poison in 1404, leaving the reputation of a merciful and pious prince.

ALBERT V was the second emperor of this name.

ALBERT VI, surnamed the Prodigal, son of Ernest, prince of Stiria, and a descendant of Leopold, the son of Albert the Wise, had great contention with his brother Frederic, the emperor, respecting the succession to the duchy of Austria, which was claimed by the latter. The war continued at intervals between them for the space of six years, and was only terminated by the death of Albert, which happened in 1463, occasioned, as was suspected, by poison.

ALBERT, archduke of Austria, and governor of the Low Countries, was the sixth son of the emperor Maximilian II. He was at first destined for the church, and made cardinal and archbishop; but renouncing his ecclesiastical dignities, he married Elisabeth Clare Eugenia, daughter of Philip II, from whom he received in dowry the Low Countries and Franche-Comte. He was engaged in an unsuccessful war with Maurice of Nassau, during which the memorable siege of Ostend was carried on. The capture of this town was followed by a treaty of peace, and shortly after that by the death of the archduke, in 1604, greatly beloved by his subjects. Krantz. Sax. l. 11; c. 33; Thuan. Hist. c. 42, &c.; Grot. de Bell. Belg.; Spond. in Annal. Eccles.; P. Dan. Hist. de France.

Dukes of Bavaria.

ALBERT I, Count of Hainault, Holland, Zealand, &c. governed those countries with much wisdom and humanity in the place of his brother William III, who was not of sound mind. He died in 1404.

ALBERT II, son of the preceding, died before his father, without issue.

ALBERT III, surnamed the Devout, the son of Ernest, was born in 1396, and died in 1460, much beloved by all Germany.

ALBERT IV, surnamed the Wise, although the third and youngest son of Albert III, was left possessor of his dominions, his eldest brother, John, having made him a sharer in the government during his lifetime, and after his death he retained them through the countenance of the emperor, in spite of the efforts made by his brother Christopher. He died in 1508.

ALBERT V, son of William III, was born in 1528, succeeded his father in 1550, and died in 1579, after having distinguished himself by his zeal in behalf of the Romish church.

ALBERT, the eldest son of William, and brother of Maximilian, commenced the electoral branch. He was born in 1584, and administered the government for his nephew, Ferdinand Maria. Savasin. Chron.; Gans. Arb. Geneal. Dom. Aust.

Dukes and Electors of Saxony.

ALBERT I, surnamed the Proud, the son of Otho, presumed to make war on his father, in order to obtain what he supposed to be his right, but was cut off in the midst of his wicked career.

ALBERT II, succeeded his father Henry, in 1288, but disgraced himself by his vices, particularly by his conduct towards his wife, who, flying from him to escape his violence, died in a monastery. He also ended his days in a monastery, after having been engaged in unsuccessful wars with his children.

ALBERT III, who was the first elector of Saxony, was the son of Bernard, of the family of Anhalt. He succeeded his father in 1212, and after governing with much wisdom, died in 1260.

ALBERT IV succeeded his father, Albert III, and although of a peaceable temper, he was engaged on the side of his brother-in-law the emperor, Albert, against Adolphus. At the coronation of the former, the concourse assembled on that occasion was so great, that Albert, with several other persons, were squeezed to death in the crowd.

ALBERT V, son of Venceslas, succeeded his brother, Rudolphus III, in 1419, and died in 1422, in consequence of being driven out at night by a fire, that had caught a shepherd's hut, where he had taken refuge after the chase.

ALBERT, the sixth duke of Saxony of this name, and son of Frederic II, was made governor of Friesland; notwithstanding his valour and prudence he was engaged in frequent warfare with his subjects till his death in 1491.

Marquisses and Electors of Brandenburg, and Dukes of Prussia.

ALBERT I, surnamed the Bear, son of Otho, prince of Anhalt, converted his principality from a forest into a cultivated and populous country, and died in 1168.

ALBERT II, brother of the preceding, succeeded his brother, Otho II, in 1206, and died in 1221.

ALBERT III, surnamed Achilles and Ulysses, son of Frederic I, was born in 1414, and died in 1486, after having taken part in many wars, and engaged in many single combats. He was remarkable no less for courage than adroitness and policy.

ALBERT IV, first duke of Prussia, and grandson of the preceding, was born in 1490. He succeeded Frederic, of Saxony, as grand master of the Teutonic Order, but compromised the interests of the order for the dutchy of Prussia, with which he was invested in 1525. He embraced the cause of the reformers, and took part in all the wars and divisions which at that time distracted Germany.

ALBERT, Frederic, of Brandenburg, and duke of Prussia, succeeded his father, Albert IV, in 1568, but becoming a lunatic shortly after, his cousin, George Frederic, administered the government in his name. He died in 1608.

ALBERT, marquis of Brandenburg, surnamed the Alcibiades of Germany, son of Casimir, marquis of Cullenbach, was distinguished by the active part he took in the opposition to Charles V, and died in 1557, of diseases occasioned by intemperance. Thuan. Hist. l. 4, 10, &c.

Dukes of Brunswick.

ALBERT I, surnamed the Great, the son of Otho I, built Harburg, Ottenburg, and other towns, and died in 1279, having the reputation of a valiant enterprising prince.

ALBERT the Fat, succeeded his brother William, and after a peaceful reign died in 1318. Krantz. Metropol. Bert. Ker. German. Hist. l. 2.

Dukes of Mecklenburgh.

ALBERT I, son of Henry, the Lion, was created with his brother a duke, by the emperor Charles IV, in 1348, in consideration of the services he had rendered him in carrying on a war against Lewis, duke of Brandenburg, and other princes.

ALBERT II, son of the preceding, was chosen king of Sweden in his father's lifetime.

ALBERT III, son of the preceding, became a partner in the government with his brother, duke John, and died in 1423.

ALBERT IV, son of Henry the Fat, succeeded his father in 1477, but died in the same year without issue.

ALBERT V, surnamed the Handsome, son of Magnus II, made an unsuccessful attempt to reinstate Christiern II, the deposed king of Denmark, and died in 1547.

ALBERT, John, vide John Albert.

Counts of Nassau.

ALBERT, son of George and Anne Amelia, of Sarbruck, his first wife, was born in 1596, and was killed by the blow of a musket in 1626, in the service of the United Provinces.

ALBERT, the son of Philip, count of Weilbourg, and Anne, daughter of Albert, count of Mansfield, re-united the seignory of Sarbruck with that of Weilbourg, and died in 1616.

Counts of Vermandois.

ALBERT I, succeeded Herbert, his father, in 948, and after having contributed to the deposition of Charles the Simple, died in 988.

ALBERT II, son of Herbert III, founded the abbey of Buccilli, and died in 1035. Flodoard. Chron. Saint Marth. Hist. Geneal. de France Le P. Anselme.

Distinguished Persons.

ALBERT, or Alberti de Luines, an ancient and illustrious family, was a branch of the house of Alberti, of Florence, which settled at Venaison, in France. Many members of this family distinguished themselves in the service of the French kings, of which the following are the principal:

ALBERT, Thomas, was the son of Lewis, who left Florence. He was in the service of Charles VII, from whom he received many honours and estates, and died in 1455.

ALBERT, Leo, great grandson of the preceding, was in the wars in Italy, and was killed in the battle of Cerissoles, gained by the count d'Enghien over the marquis del Vasto. He became lord of Luines by his marriage with Antonia de Segur.

ALBERT, Honoré d', sieur de Luines et de Cadenet, gave early proofs of his valour and good conduct, for which he received many favours from Charles IX. One of his greatest exploits was his combat at Vincennes, in the presence of the king and court, with captain Panier, of the Scotch corps, in which he came off victorious, having slain his adversary. He died in 1592.

ALBERT, Charles d', duc de Luines, and son of the preceding, was born in 1578, and rose to the highest posts of government under Henry IV and Louis XIII; but drew upon himself many enemies by the active part which he took in the troubles of the times, particularly in repressing the turbulence of the nobles, and supporting the royal authority. He died in 1621 of the scarlet fever, or, as some say, of poison.

ALBERT, Honoré d', third son of Honoré Seigneur de Cadenet, and duc de Chaunnes, acquired and preserved the esteem of Louis XIII and XIV, and after filling the highest posts, particularly that of ambassador to England, in 1620, he died in 1649. In consequence of his alliance with the house of Ailly, in Piccardie, he and his posterity engaged to take that name, and bear their arms.

ALBERT, d'Ailly Charles, third son of the preceding, who inherited his father's titles by the death of his two elder brothers, was three times ambassador at the court of Rome, and died in 1698.

ALBERT, Louis Charles d', duc de Luines, and third son of Charles d'Albert, duc de Luines, was no less high in office than his father, but led a more retired life, and died in 1690, leaving some religious works; among others, 'Recueil de Sentences tirée des S. S. Pères,' Paris, 1680.

ALBERT, Charles Honoré d', duke of Luines, son of the preceding, and known under the name of duc de Chevreuse, was born in 1646, and died in 1712, after having been engaged in the active service of the king against the Turks, and in the war with Spain.

ALBERT, Louis Joseph d', ninth son of Louis Charles, known in his youth under the name of chevalier and comte d'Albert, was born in 1672, and after having distinguished himself in all the memorable battles of that day, in which he was dangerously wounded, he attached himself to the court of Bavaria, the elector of which becoming emperor, he was made field-marshal of the empire, and sent as ambassador extraordinary to the king of France.

ALBERT, Charles Honoré d', count of Tours, and son of Charles Honoré, was born in 1669, and after serving in several campaigns, was killed near Bellikeim, regretted by the whole army for his valour and capacity.

ALBERT, Maria-Charles Louis d', duc de Chevreuse, and prince de Neufchatel, &c., was at the escalade of Prague, and at every important action which took place during the war that was terminated by the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle.

ALBERT (Ecc.) a name common to several prelates.

ALBERT, archbishop of Hamburg. [Vide Adelbert]

ALBERT, or Adalbert, archbishop of Ments, a turbulent prelate in the reign of Henry V, who was imprisoned on account of a conspiracy which he formed against the emperor, but being released soon after, died in 1137. Otho. Frisingen. l. 7, c. 14, &c.

ALBERT, de Louvain, cardinal, bishop of Liege, and brother of Henry, duc de Lorraine, having been elected bishop, and his election confirmed by the pope Celestin III, in spite of the opposition of the emperor, Henry VI, he was assassinated in 1198. Bailet. Vies des Saints.

ALBERT, who was born at Castro di Guallester, in Italy, was raised from a canonry to the bishopric of Verceil; and after being employed on several missions by popes Clement III and Innocent III, was appointed patriarch of Jerusalem; but took up his residence at Acre, where he was assassinated in 1214. Genebr. Onuph. in Chron.; Possevin. in Appar. sacr.; Spondan. Annal. ann. 1203.

ALBERT, of Parma, was legate to the Holy See in the 13th century, being sent by Innocent IV into England, and from thence into France. Le P. Dan. Hist. de France.

ALBERT, bishop of Frisingen, assisted Albert, of Austria, at the siege of Zurich, and died in 1359. Bert. de Urb. German. l. 3.

ALBERT, a descendant from the barons Von Wintz, an ancient and illustrious family of Austria, was made bishop of Passau, the inhabitants of which place having revolted against him, and being defeated in a bloody battle, were fined by the emperor 3000 marks for their revolt. He died in 1380.

ALBERT I, son of Ernest, elector of Saxony, was chosen archbishop of Mentz, and died two years after, in 1480.

ALBERT II, cardinal and archbishop of Mentz, was a man of talent and a lover of learning, who gave much encouragement to the jesuits.

ALBERT (Biog.) or Alberic, a canon of the church of Aix, in Provence, composed a history of the first crusade from 1095, when it commenced, to 1120, when it terminated, in the second year of the reign of Baldwin: it was published by Reinecius, in 2 vols. 4to. Helmstadt, 1584, under the title of 'Chronicon Hierosolymitanum de Bello Sacro.' It was also inserted in the collection of the historians of the crusades, published in 1611, under the title 'Gesta Dei per Francos.'

ALBERT, surnamed Argentinus, lived in the 14th century, and composed a History or Chronicle of what passed in the empire from Rudolphus I to Charles IV. Voss. de Hist. Lat.

ALBERT, of Saxony, flourished about the middle of the 14th century, and wrote a commentary on the tables of Alphonsus, besides eight books on physics, three books on the heavens and the universe, and other works on similar subjects.

ALBERT, Erasmus, a pupil of Luther, and an active partisan in favour of the reformation, died in 1551, leaving a satirical account of St. Francis, which at that period produced the desired end of bringing the Romish church into contempt.

ALBERTANO, of Brescia (Biog.) an Italian writer of the 13th century, wrote, 1. 'De Dilectione Dei et Proximi.' 2. 'De Formula Vitæ Honestæ.' 3. 'De Consolatione et Consilio.' 4. 'De Doctrina Loquendi et Tacendi.'

ALBERTAS (Hist.) or Albertazzo, a noble family of Provence, was of Italian extraction, and in the person of Anthony Albertas became domiciliated in France in 1360, during the pontificate of Innocent VI, at Avignon. This Anthony left Italy to escape the fury of the contending factions of the Guelphs and Ghibelins, which were incessantly at war with each other at that time.

ALBERTAS, Anthony d', descended from the same family, was first consul of Marseilles in 1511; and his son, Peter d'Albertas, attained to the same dignity in 1542, both of whom being high in the confidence of their respective sovereigns, Louis XII and Charles IX, they were entrusted with the government of the city in its most important concerns.

ALBERTAS, Anthony Nicholas d', son of the preceding, was early initiated in arms, and by his skill and valour acquired, not only the confidence of his prince, but was a considerable favourite at the court of Henry IV.

ALBERTET (Biog.) a mathematician and poet of Provence, lived about 1290. He wrote some mathematical pieces, and some poems in honour of the marchioness de Misalpine, which, after his death, were published by Faber d'Uzes as his own. The plagiarist, however, suffered the punishment of whipping for this offence. Nostradam. Vies des Poëtes Provenc.

ALBERTI (Hist.) the name of a noble family of Florence, which at one time was at the head of the government; but at length they experienced a reverse of fortune, and were driven into exile, and otherwise much persecuted. ALBOINUS (Hist.) king of the Lombards, subdued the Gepidae, after having killed Cunimond their king. He was assassinated in his turn in 574 by Rosimond, the daughter of Cunimond, whom he had taken to wife. He reigned 30 years, contracted alliances with Clotarius, king of the French, with the Huns, with the Bulgarians, Sarmatians, &c.; and rendered himself very formidable to all his neighbours.

ALBON (Hist.) the name of an ancient and illustrious house in France, some of whom are entitled to particular notice.

ALBON, Humbert d', seigneur de Pouillenai, was at the battle of Poitiers, and that of Brignac, and at the taking of the city of Ancy, on all which occasions he was taken prisoner.

ALBON, John d', surnamed de l'Espinasse, and Seigneur de St. Andre, fought in the service of the king against the English and Burgundians, and was taken prisoner in 1417.

ALBON, Guichard d', grandson of the preceding seigneur de St. Andre, &c. was also in the king's service, and reduced many places to submission, which favoured the party of the duke of Orleans. He died in 1480.

ALBON, John d', the son of the preceding seigneur de St. Andre, chevalier by order of the king, and gentleman of his bed-chamber, defended the city of St. Quentin against the attacks of the English, for which he was made governor, with the collar of the order. He died in 1550.

ALBON, James d', son of the preceding, marquis of Fronsac, and seigneur de St. Andre, chevalier of the order of St. Michael, known by the appellation of the mareschal de St. Andre, was born in 1574, and was killed by one Babigny de Mezieres with a pistol, for some personal offence at the battle of Dreux, in 1562. He was at the battle of Cerissoles, the siege of Boulogne, and many other engagements, in which he invariably distinguished himself as a brave soldier and a great captain.

ALBON, Bertrand d', seigneur de St. Forgeux, and son of the fourth William d'Albon, gentleman in ordinary of the king's bed-chamber, took part with the king against the league, and contributed much to the reduction of Lyons in 1594.

ALBON, Anthony d', (Ecc.) the eldest son of the fourth William d'Albon of the family abovementioned, was born in 1507, and died in 1574, after having served the king as governor of Lyons, and the church in the character of its archbishop, in both of which capacities he defended this city against the Huguenots. He wrote some Latin verses, and edited Ausonius.

ALBON, Claude d', (Biog.) an advocate of the parliament of Dauphiny, published in 1575, an historical and political work, in which he treats of the royal dignity of the creation of emperors, and the institution of electors, &c.

ALBON II, Claude Camille François, was born in 1753, and died in 1789. He wrote, 1. 'Dialogue entre Alexandre et Titus,' 8vo. 2. 'Observations d'un Citoyen.' 3. 'Œuvres Diverses.' 4. ALBRECHT, John William, a physician, was born in 1703, and died in 1736, leaving some works on medicine.

ALBRET (Hist.) one of the most noble and illustrious families of France, of whom mention is made as early as 1050, when Amanieu Sieur d'Albret flourished, from whom this family deduces its origin.

ALBRET, Arcaud d', the eighth of this name of the abovementioned family, viscount de Tartas, and grand chamberlain of France, was in the service of Edward III for some time, but attached himself afterwards to the court of Charles V, on his marriage with the queen's sister.

ALBRET, Charles d', the first of this name, and son of the preceding count de Dreux, viscount de Tartas, and constable of France, was killed at the battle of Agincourt in 1415.

ALBRET, John d', the second of this name, became king of Navarre and count de Foix, on his marriage with Catharine de Foix, queen of Navarre.

ALBRET, Charlotte d', daughter of Alain d'Albret, and duchess de Valentinois, was distinguished as much for her prudence and piety as for her beauty and wit. She was married to Cæsar Borgia, and after having shared in the misfortunes of her husband, though not in his faults, she died in 1614.

ALBRET, Joan d', grand-daughter of the preceding queen of Navarre, and wife of Anthony of Bourbon, was the mother of Henry IV. She embraced the Protestant faith, and died in 1572, in her 44th year, as is suspected, of poison.

ALBRET, Louis d' (Ecc.) son of Charles d'Albret, the second of this name, was born in 1422, and died in 1465; having been created cardinal in 1461, by Pope Pius II.

ALBRET, Amanieu, was the brother of Charlotte d'Albret, above-mentioned, and by the marriage contract of his sister with Cæsar Borgia, he was made cardinal by Alexander VI in 1498, but through the intrigues of this pope's enemies he was not put in quiet possession of his dignity till the pontificate of Leo X. soon after which he died in 1520. Sainte Marthe Hist. Genealog. de la Maison de France; Aubert Hist. des Cardinaux; Du Chêne Hist. des Cardinaux.

ALBRICUS (Ecc.) bishop of Utrecht in the eighth century, died after governing the see for 18 years, in 784. A small treatise 'De Decorum Imaginibus,' 8vo. Basil. 1578, is attributed to him.

ALBRICUS (Biog.) or Albricius, an English physician and scholar of the 11th century, was born in London, and wrote, 1. 'De Origine Deorum.' 2. 'De Ratione Veneni.' 3. 'Virtutes Antiquorum.' 4. 'Canones Speculativi.' Other works have been attributed to him, which belong, as is supposed, to the bishop above mentioned.

ALBUINUS (Biog.) a priest of the 10th century, made a selection of passages from the scriptures and the fathers.

ALEXANDER, Magus, of Abonoteichos, an impostor and disciple of Apollonius Thyaneus, who, in the reign of Antonius, pretended to be Æsculapius, and to work miracles by a serpent, which he carried about with him. His life has been written by Lucian. Luc. in Vit. ; Baron. Annal. ann. 145 ; Spon. Recherch. Cur.

ALEXANDER (Numis.) the king of Macedonia, and the most distinguished prince of this name, is represented on medals, gems, &c. having his head adorned with a diadem, and mostly a ram's horn on his head, [Vide Plate III.] to denote his descent from Jupiter Ammon, sometimes with the spoils of a lion. The inscriptions, ALEXANDER MAGNUS MACEDON—ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ΒΑΣΙΛΕΩΣ, with the addition sometimes of KOINON ΜΑΚΕΔΟΝΩΝ. The types on the reverse of his medals are the figure of Jupiter sitting and holding an eagle, or the rape of the Sabines, or of Alexander himself taming the horse Bucephalus, &c.; but those which bear the figure of a lion, or of a cupid riding on a lion, are supposed to represent the most correct effigy of this prince; but antiquaries are by no means agreed on what medals ought to be assigned to him, in distinction from princes of the same name; thus most medalists assign fig. 1 to Alexander, the son of Cassander; some to Alexander, king of Epirus; but Beger, with some others, assigns it to Alexander the Great. In fig. 2 he is represented less questionably with his face elevated; and the annexed figure represents him as he is depicted on a gem, with his mother Olympias and his reputed father Jupiter. The earliest medals of Alexander are supposed to have been struck in the reign of Caracalla. One medal is given by Pellerin, bearing the inscription, ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ, and having for its type the figure of a man with a horse, and on the reverse a square, which is commonly assigned to Alexander I, king of Macedon. Goltz. Græc. ; Spanheim. Dissert. ; Haverkamp. Num. Cont. ; Beger. Thesaur. Brand. ; Pellerin. Rec. de Med. des Rois, &c. &c.

ALEXANDER I and II, the two kings of Syria, are represented on medals, as in the annexed figures 1 and 2; inscriptions,

The former of these princes has frequently the head of his queen Cleopatra, coupled with his own, as in fig. 3. The most frequent types on the reverse of the medals of these two princes are the figure of Jupiter sitting with a victory in his hand, of Neptune sitting and holding his trident, or of Apollo sitting on a tripod, or prophetic stool, &c. Vaillant. Hist. Seleuc. ; Hayn. Thes. Britan.

ALEXANDER, a medal, is ascribed to the son of Basilus, bearing the inscription, ALEXANDER AUGUSTUS.

ALEXANDER VI, VII, and VIII, popes of this name, of whom several medals are extant.

ALEXANDER VI, besides his effigy, [Vide Plate X.] bears the inscription ALESSANDRO VI. PONT. MAX.; on the reverse his family name, RODERICO LORENZUOLA D. BORGIA S. P. M.CD.XCII., i. e. Roderico Lenzuola del Borgia Sommo Pontefice, 1492, struck on his election; CORONAT on his coronation; RESERVAVIT et CLAUSIT ANN. JUB. M. D. on keeping the jubilee, &c. ALEXANDER VII, besides his effigy, [Vide Plate X.] his medals bear on the obverse the inscription ALEXANDER VII. PONT. MAX.; on the reverse they commemorate the buildings which were completed under his auspices, &c., as SANCTO ANDRÆ APOSTOLO, on the completion of St. Andrews; DILEXI DECOREM DOMUS TUÆ—SANCTO NICOLAO, on repairing and beautifying St. Nicholas' church; NAVALE CENTUM CELLARUM, on the building a dockyard near to the harbour of Trajan, called the Centum Cellæ; FUNDAMENTA EJUS IN MONTIBUS SANCTIS, on the construction of the portico in the forum of the Vatican, &c. &c.

ALEXANDER VIII is represented, as in the annexed figure, on a medal, which, according to the inscription, was struck on his election, ALEXANDER VIII. OTTOBONUS P. O. M. CREATUS VI. OCTOBRI M.DC.LXXXIX. On the reverse of some medals are the inscriptions OPTIMO ORBIS PASTORI ANN. II, on a public rejoicing for the election of this pope; NON PREVALEBUNT, in allusion to the wars against the Turks and heretics, represented by the beast with seven heads; NOSTRA FELICITAS, in allusion to his bounty and prudence; S. PETRUS APOSTOLUS, with the effigy of that apostle, such as it is, offering the key to the pope, &c.

ALEXANDER (Her.) the name of a family, of which William Alexander, earl of Stirling, mentioned under History, was an elder branch. His title is now extinct, but James Alexander, of a junior branch, was created in 1790 baron Caledon, viscount Alexander in 1797, and earl of Caledon in 1800.

ALEXANDER, Viscount, the title commonly borne by the eldest son of the earl of Caledon.

ALEXANDER (Biog.) a poet and grammarian of Ætolia in the 130th Olympiad, A. C. 260, was reckoned among the number of the poets who were called the Pleiades. Parthen. in Erotig. ; Suidas.

ALEXANDER, an Epicurean mentioned by Plutarch. Plut. Sympos. l. 2 ; Quest. 3 ; Cassend. Vit. Epic. l. 2, c. 6.

ALEXANDER, surnamed Polyhistor, a grammarian and historian in the 172d Olympiad, A. C. 85, of whose innumerable works fragments only are preserved in Plutarch, Pliny, Athenæus, and Eusebius.

ALEXANDER, of Ephesus, an orator, poet, historian, and geographer, mentioned by Strabo and others. •

ALEXANDER, of Myndus, quoted by Plutarch, supposed to be the same as Alexon, of Diogenes Laertius.

ALEXANDER, of Ægeus, a peripatetic and preceptor of Noro, wrote a commentary on the 'Meteorologica' of Aristotle, wherefore he has been confounded with the subject of the following article.

ALEXANDER, surnamed Aphrodisius, native of Aphrodisia, in Caria, and a distinguished commentator on Aristotle in the reign of Marcus Aurelius; wrote, 1. 'De Fato,' &c. which was printed in the Greek original at the Aldine press, fol. 1533, at the end of the works of Themistius; translated into Latin by Grotius, and published in his 'Veterum Philosophorum Sententiæ de Fato,' 4to. Paris. 1648. An edition in Greek and Latin was published at London in 12mo. 1688. 2. 'Commentarium in Primum Librum Priorum Analyticorum Aristotelis,' Gr. fol. Venet. 1489; 4to. Florent. 1521, translated into Latin by Jos. Bern. Feliciandus, fol. Venet. 1542, 1546, and 1560. 3. 'Commentarius in viii Topiogram Libros,' fol. Venet. 1513; translated into Latin by Gul. Dorotheus, Venet. 1526 and 1541, Paris, 1542; and by Rasarius, Venet. 1563, 1573. 4. 'Commentarii in Elenchos Sophisticos,' Gr. fol. Venet. 1520, with the 'Commentarius in Primum Librum,' &c. 4to. Florent. 1552; translated into Latin by Rasarius, Venet. 1557. 5. 'In Libros xii Metaphysicorum ex Versione Jos. Genesii Sepulveda,' fol. Rom. 1527, Paris, 1536, Venet. 1544 and 1561. The Greek text has never been printed, although there are many MS. copies in the Imperial Library at Paris, and other libraries. 6. 'In Librum de Sensu,' &c. Gr. at the end of Simplicius; 'Commentary on the Books respecting the Soul,' fol. Venet. 1527; and in the Latin, 'Lucilius Philotheus,' fol. 1544, 1549, 1554, 1559, 1573. 7. 'In Aristotelis Meteorologica,' Gr. fol. Venet. 1527; and in the Latin of Alex. Picalomini, fol. 1540, 1548, 1575. 8. 'De Mistione,' Gr. with the preceding. 9. 'De Anima Libri Duo,' Gr. at the end of Themistius; and in Latin by Jerome Donato, fol. 1532, 1534. 10. 'Physica Scholia,' &c. Gr. fol. Venet. 1536; and in Latin by Bagolinus, Venet. 1541, 1549, 1555, 1589. 11. 'Problematorum Medicorum,' &c. the best Greek edition of which is in Sylburgius's works of Aristotle; this is attributed by some to Alexander Trallianus; as also 'Libellus de Febribus Latine Georgio Valla Interprete,' in a collection of various works, translated by Valla, Venet. 1488; this has not been printed in Greek. Other works in Arabic, as well as in Greek, are attributed to Alexander Aphrodisius. Porphyr. in Vit. Plotin.; S. Hieron. Epist. ad Dom.; St. Cyrill. adv. Jul.

ALEXANDER, Trallianus, a physician of the sixth century, as is supposed, wrote treatises on medicine, some of which are extant and have been published at different times, namely, a Greek edition, fol. Paris. 1548; a Latin edition, among the 'Medicæ Artis Principes,' fol. Paris. 1567.

ALEXANDER, an abbot of Celesinus in the 13th century, wrote a history of Roger, king of Sicily.

ALEXANDER, an English abbot of the Benedictine order in the 13th century, wrote different treatises.

ALEXANDER, Neckham, vide Neckham.

ALEXANDER, of Somerset, an Augustine of the 13th century, made an abridgment of scripture history.

ALEXANDER, Alesius, i.e. of Ales, or Hales, surnamed the Irrefragable Doctor, or the Fountain of Life, an Englishman by birth, of the order of Franciscans in the 13th century, was the preceptor of Thomas Aquinas, and the author of several works, of which only his 'Summa Theologiæ' remains.

ALEXANDER, surnamed of Paris, a French poet of the 12th century, wrote, 'Le Roman d'Alexandre,' and other works.

ALEXANDER, Dolensis, a Dominican of the 13th century, wrote, 'Doctrinale Puerorum,' 1212; 'De Sphæra;' 'De Computo Ecclesiastico.'

ALEXANDER, D'Imola, vide Tartagni.

ALEXANDER, Ab Alexandro, a lawyer of Naples, died in 1523, leaving 'Dierum Genialium,' the first edition of which was printed at Rome, under the title of 'Alexandri de Alexandro Dies Geniales,' fol. 1522, and several times since; but the edition of Leyden, in 2 vols. 8vo. 1675, is the most esteemed. He also wrote, 'Dissertationes IV de Rebus Admirandis quæ in Italia nuper contigerunt,' which have been incorporated with the preceding.

ALEXANDER, le Charpentier, son of an English carpenter of the 15th century, wrote a book, entitled, 'The Destruction of Vices.'

ALEXANDER, Natalis, or Noel, a writer of the 17th century, was born in 1639, and died in 1724. His works are, 1. 'Summa S. Thomæ Vindicata,' &c. Paris. 1675. 2. 'Selecta Historiæ Ecclesiasticæ Capita,' 26 vols. 8vo. 1686-89; a new edition enlarged and entitled, 'Historia Ecclesiastica Veteris Novique Testamenti,' 8 vols. fol. 1699. 3. 'Theologia Dogmatica,' 10 vols. 8vo. Paris. 1698. 4. 'A Commentary on the Four Gospels.' 5. 'Statuta Facultatis Artium Thomistica Collegio Parisiensi Fratrum Prædicatorum Instituta,' Paris. 12mo. 1683.

ALEXANDER, Trallian, wrote a history of the Turks in modern Greek.

ALEXANDER, a Benedictine, was born in 1654, and died in 1728. He wrote, 1. 'La Médecine et la Chirurgie des Pauvres,' 12mo. Paris. 1738. 2. 'Dictionnaire Botanique et Pharmacétique,' 8vo.

ALEXANDER, of St. Theresa, a Carmelite, wrote in 1684, 'Hydra Prophanarum Novitatum,' &c.

ALEXANDER, Wendoc, vide Wendoc.

ALEXANDER, John, a dissenting teacher, was born in 1736, and died in 1765, leaving, among other things, 'A Paraphrase upon the Fifteenth Chapter of the First Epistle to the Corinthians.'

ALEXANDRA (Myth.) 'Ἀλεξάνδρα, a name given sometimes to Cassandra.

ALEXANDRA (Hist.) the name of four princesses, mentioned by Josephus.

ALEXANDRA, 'Ἀλεξάνδρα, or πῶς, Salome, which signifies nearly the same thing, i.e. peace, pacifier, or helper; wife of Alexander Jannæus, was regent at his death, and died A. M. 3935, A. C. 69.

ALEXANDRA, the daughter of Aristobulus, wife of Philippion, who was killed by Ptolemy Mennæus, his father, in order that he might marry his widow, with whom he had fallen in love. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14, c. 15.

ALEXANDRA, daughter of Hyrcanius, wife of Alexander, son of Aristobulus II, was the mother of Mariamne, wife of Herod, by whom she was put to death. A. M. 3976, A. C. 28. Joseph. l. 15, c. 11.

ALEXANDRA, daughter of Phazael, the son of that Phazael who killed himself when taken prisoner by the Parthians. She was the wife of Timius, a Cyprian prince.

ALEXANDRA, the nurse of Nero. Suet. in Ner. c. 50.

ALEXANDRIA (Bibl.) 'Ἀλεξανδρεία, the town in Egypt described under Geography, of which Apollon was a native. Acts xviii. 24. St. Paul was placed in a ship of this city when carried to Rome. Acts xxvii. 6.

ALEXANDRIA (Geog.) 'Ἀλεξανδρία, a name given to several places which were built by Alexander in the course of his conquests; but the one which is supereminent over all the rest is the once illustrious city of Egypt, now an inconsiderable place, known among the inhabitants by the name of Scanderia. [Vide Scanderia]

History of Alexandria.

Alexandria was built by its founder 332 years A. C., who intended it, not only for the capital of Egypt, but of all his conquests. From its commodious situation for commerce, it became the great mart of the eastern world, and increased in opulence and luxury so as to vie with Rome in grandeur. It was the residence of the Egyptian kings, and under the Ptolemies was the seat of learning as well as wealth. Its library, which had been collected at a vast expense from all parts of the earth; was of such an extent, that when consumed by the order of the caliph Omar, it is said to have supplied fuel for six months for 400 baths that the city contained. After a siege of 13 months this city was taken by Amry, in the name of the caliph, and treated with such rigour, that it has since gradually declined to its present state. It does not now contain more than 4000 inhabitants; but there are still very many remains of its ancient grandeur, which render it particularly interesting to travellers; among the number of those that are most remarkable, are Pompey's pillar and two obelisks, called Cleopatra's Needles. In our own time this city has acquired an additional interest, by having been the theatre of two victories gained by the English over the French in 1801, which led to the evacuation of Egypt by the latter.

Ecclesiastical History of Alexandria.

On the introduction of Christianity into Alexandria, a church was founded there by St. Mark, A. D. 52, which was afterwards erected into a patriarchate that held the second rank in ecclesiastical dignity next to that of Rome. The following is a list in chronological order of the patriarchs of Alexandria:—

The inscriptions AA. AE. AΛEΞ. AIT. AΛEΞANAPEA, AΛEΞANAPEIA, AΛEΞANAPIA, ALEXANDRIA, AΛEΞANAPEON, AΛEΞANAPINON; but the greater part of the imperial medals of Alexandria are without the name; instead of which they have the letters A, B, Γ, Δ, &c. to mark the year of the prince's reign. The symbols employed by the Alexandrians on their medals were the Ibis, Hippopotamus, ears of corn, the lion, and others, which were common to the whole country, or to Africa.

A medal of Adrian represents, as in the annexed figure, Alexandria in the form of a woman sitting on the ground having, on her right, and at her feet, ears of corn, and resting on a basket full of fruits, indicative of plenty. ALFRAGAN (Biog.) or Alfergani, surnamed Muhamed, or Ahmed Ben Cothair, flourished, according to Abulfarajius, about the time of Al-Mamon, i. e. A. D. 825. He wrote 'Rudimenta Astronomie,' translations of which were printed in 4to. in 1493, 1537, 1590, and 1669, the two latter under the eye, first of Christman, and second of Golius; besides other works on solar horaries, astrolabes, and since Abulfarag. Hist. Dinast. 9; Golius. Pref. in Alfergan.; Hist. des Math.

ALFRED, the Great (Hist.) the youngest son of Ethelwolf, king of the West Saxons, was born in 849, at Wannating or Wanading, supposed to be Wantage, in Berkshire, and died after a glorious reign of 28 years, in 900, as is generally supposed. To represent the life and character of this prince, as he is universally described, would be to give a catalogue of all human virtues. Among his public acts he is most distinguished as the complete restorer, if not the original founder of the University of Oxford, which is happy to owe its origin to such a prince; and is acknowledged to be the repairer or rebuilder of all the monasteries in the kingdom, to which he also added others of his own founding; and lastly, as the framer of a complete system of legislation, comprehending in it, among other peculiarities, the trial by jury, which is attributed to him by some as an original invention; but he is supposed by others to have only adopted it from the ancient Saxons, into his system of jurisprudence. His works, as an author, are exceedingly numerous, as the following list sufficiently testifies: 1. 'Brevarium quoddam Collectum ex Legibus Trojanorum,' l. 1. 2. 'Visaxonum Leges,' l. 1. 3. 'Instituta Quædam,' l. 1. 4. 'Contra Judices Iniquos.' 5. 'Acta Magistratum Suorum,' l. 1. 6. 'Regum Fortunæ Variæ.' 7. 'Dicta Sapientum,' l. 1. 8. 'Parabolæ et Sales,' l. 1. 9. 'Collectiones Chronicorum.' 10. 'Epistolæ ad Wulfsigium,' l. 1. 11. 'Manuale Meditationum.' Besides numerous translations, of which the following are the principal: 12. 'Dialogus D. Gregorii.' 13. 'Pastorale Ejusdem Gregorii.' 14. 'Hormestam Pauli Orosii,' l. 1. 15. 'Bætiæ de Consolatione,' l. 5. 16. 'Asserii Sententiæ,' l. 1. 17. 'Martina Leges,' l. 1. 18. 'Malmutinæ Leges,' l. 1. 19. 'Gesta Anglorum Bedæ,' l. 5. 20. 'Æsopi Fabulæ.' 21. 'Psalterium Davidicum,' l. 1.

ALFRED, surnamed the Philosopher of the 13th Century, wrote A Translation of Five Books from Boetius, 'On the Consolations of Philosophy;' A Translation of four Books of Aristotle on Meteors, and one on Vegetables; 'De Naturis Rerum;' 'De Educatione Accipitrum;' 'De Motu sou Vita Cordis.'

ALFRIC (Ecc.) of St. Albans, as he was called, was abbot of a monastery of that name, and wrote a liturgy and other treatises, not now extant.

ALFWOLD (Hist.) king of Northumberland, succeeded Eardulf, and reigned only two years.

ALGAROTTI, Francis (Biog.) an Italian writer of Venice, was born in 1712, and died in 1764. His writings, according to the last and most correct edition of Venice, 1790—1794, form 17 vols. 8vo., and consist of 'Memoirs of his Life and Writings;' 'An Analysis of the Newtonian System;' 'Pieces on Architecture,' &c.; 'Travels in Russia;' 'Letters on Painting,' &c. &c.

ALGAZELI, Abou-Hamed-Mohammed (Biog.) an Arabian philosopher, was born at Thous in 1058, and died in 1111, leaving, among other things, 1. 'A Treatise on Religious Sciences.' 2. 'Philosophica et Logica Alguzeli.'

ALGER (Biog.) or Algerus, a learned priest of the church of Liege in the 12th century, died in 1131, leaving among his works, 1. 'A Treatise on Mercy and Justice,' published by Martenne, in the fifth volume of his 'Anecdotes.' 2. 'A Treatise on the Sacraments.'

ALGERIA (Geog.) a town and province of Africa, now Algiers.

ALGERUS, Pomponius (Ecc.) a native of Nola in Italy, who, having embraced the protestant religion, which he zealously taught, was condemned to be burnt by Paul IV, and suffered this punishment in the 24th year of his age.

ALGEZIRA (Geog.) a province of Turkey, in Asia, now usually called Diarbek.

ALGEZIRAS (Geog.) a town of Andalusia, in Spain, on the Straits of Gibraltar, with an ancient citadel in ruins; seven miles W. of Gibraltar. This town was taken by Alphonso XI, in 1344, after the memorable battle which he gained over the infidels in Spain.

ALGHIZI, Galeazzo (Biog.) an architect and mathematician of the 16th century, was employed by the duke of Ferrara, and also wrote a work, entitled, 'Delle Fortificazioni,' Venice, 1570.

ALGHIZI, Thomas, a lithotomist of Florence, was born in 1669, and died in 1713, in consequence of an accident from the bursting of his gun. He was a successful operator, particularly in the case of pope Clement XI; besides which he wrote a work on the subject, entitled, 'Lithotomia Overo del Cavar la Pietra,' fol. Firenze, 1707.

ALGIAPTU (Hist.) Aljatu, Olgiaptu, or Olgiatu, the son of Argoun, succeeded his brother Gazan on the throne of the Moguls in Iran, in the year of the Hegira 703, A. D. 1313, and died in 716 of the Hegira, A. D. 1326, after a just and prosperous reign of 12 years, in which he showed great zeal for the Mahometan faith, particularly according to the sect of Ali. He was the eighth successor of Jenghiz Khan. Khond. Hist. Per.

ALGIDUM (Geog.) a town of Latium, or as is mostly believed of the Æqui, near Tusculum, and 12 miles from Rome, now Rocca del Papa. There is a mountain of the same name near it, now Silva del Aglio, which Horace calls gelidus.

Horace, l. 1, od. 21, v. 5.

Vos letam fluvii, et nemorum comul
Quacunque aut gelido prominet Algido.

In another place he calls it nivalis, l. 3, od. 23.

Nam quæ nivali pascitur Algido,
Devota quercus inter et ilices.

Also, fertilis, l. 4, od. 4.

Duris v. illex touna bipennibus
Nigra v. raci frondis in Algido.

Hence the epithet Algida, Ovid. Fast. l. 2.

Videris in campis Algida terra suis.

ALGIERS (Geog.) a country of Barbary, which formed a considerable part of the Mauritania Cæsariensis of the ancients, is bounded on the N. by the Mediterranean, on the E. by the river Zaine, which divides it from Tunis; on the W. by the Mulvyia and the mountains of Trava, which part it from Morocco; and on the S. by the Sahara or Numidian desert. Its four principal provinces are Tremecen, formerly a kingdom; Algiers Proper; Bujeyah, or Bugia; and Tenenez, or Tenes; to which may be added Oran, Bona, Constantina, Couco, Labez, &c. &c. Besides Algiers, the capital, the principal towns, with their ancient names, are as follow:

Modern.	Ancient.	Modern.	Ancient.
Bona	Hippo.	Oran
Constantina, or	Cirta Julia , or	Tremecen	Telensen , or
Cucutin	Cirta Numidia.		Telmicen.
Gigeri, or Jigel	Igilgili.	Mostagan	Cartenna.
Jenez		Tessare	Cæsarea.
Bugia	Salda.

ALGIERS, the capital of Algiers, or the Algerine state, is built on the side of a mountain next the harbour, which is washed by the Mediterranean. It is 30 miles W. of Tunis, long. 3° 48' E., lat. 36° 40' N. Its present name, Algezair, or Al-Jezair, corrupted into Algiers, is an Arabic word signifying "The Island," because there was an island before the city, to which it has since been joined by a mole.

History of Algiers.

Algiers is said to have been called Julia Cæsarea, in honour of Julius Cæsar, by the Romans, who greatly embellished it, since which it has been considerably enriched by its Turkish inhabitants; but, according to Paul Diaconus, it was totally demolished by the Vandals, who wrested this kingdom from the Romans. It afterwards fell into the hands of the Greeks, till about the year 663, when the Mahomedan Arabs overrunning all this part of Africa, continued to govern it for some centuries with little interruption; but after the expulsion of the Moors from Spain, Algiers and other kingdoms of Barbary formed themselves into piratical states, which became very formidable to the neighbouring kingdoms of Europe. The Algerine state is a military despotism, which, from the time of Barbarossa, has been governed either by Turkish bashas or viceroys sent from Constantinople, or by deys of their own choosing. The town of Algiers has been exposed to several sieges and bombardments, but not in all cases with equal success. The emperor Charles V lost a fine fleet and army in an expedition against it in 1541. The English burnt their vessels in the harbour in 1635 and 1670. In 1688 it was bombarded and almost destroyed by the French; and in 1755 the Spaniards made a descent near the city with a formidable army, but were defeated with great slaughter. In 1784 they again sent a powerful fleet to attack the forts, but they were repelled by the Algerines, although they made eight successive attacks with great bravery. To England has been reserved the honour of putting a period to the outrages which have so long afflicted Europe. An expedition was sent out in 1816 under lord Exmouth, which, after a desperate conflict, reduced the Algerine fleet to ashes, and entirely destroyed the batteries by which the harbour was defended, so that the dey, having no other resource left, submitted to the humiliating terms imposed, namely, of restoring all his present captives without ransom, and abolishing Christian slavery for ever, a treaty which, in all probability, he will never be able materially to violate.

ALGOT I. (Hist.) a fabulous king of Sweden, succeeded Adolphus, long before the birth of our Saviour.

ALGOT II. son of Tordus III, reigned from 582 to 606, during which time he rendered the Russians tributary.

ALHACA (Hist.) or Alharam, king of the Moors in Spain, reigned 26 years, 10 months, and 15 days, and died in the year of the Hegira 206, A. D. 816, leaving his son Abderraman his successor. Marian. Hist. Hispan.

ALHACA, king of Cordova, reigned 16 years, and died in the year of the Hegira 366, A. D. 976, leaving his son Hassen in the tutelage of Mahomet Almansor. Roderic. Toled. Hist. Rer. gest. in Hispan.

AL IIADI (Hist.) second son of Al Mohdi, succeeded his father, and died after a reign of little more than a year of poison, administered, as some historians maintain, by his own mother, in the year of the Hegira 170, A. D. 780.

AL HAKEM (Hist.) Ebn Abd'alrahman Al Nasr, lord of Andalusia, died in the year of the Hegira 366, A. D. 976, after a reign of 15 years and upwards, during which he had gained the love of his subjects.

AL HAKEM, caliph of Syria and Egypt, was murdered at the instigation of his own sister, after a reign of 25 years, in the year of the Hegira 410, A. D. 1020.

ALHANSA (Geog.) a town of Grenada, supposed by some to have been built by the Moors, but by others to be the ancient Attigis. Lon. 2° 46' W. lat. 37° N.

ALHARAM (Hist.) vide Alhaca.

ALHARITZ (Hist.) son of Moavia, was the first who exercised the art of fowling by the means of a little bird of prey, called the Sacre, which is in the Arabic Salzara, and signifies to see quickly.

ALHAZEN (Biog.) Allacen, or Abdilazum, a mathematician of Arabia, but of what age is not known. He wrote, 1. 'Opticæ Thesaurus,' Bas. 1572, translated by Risner. 2. 'A Treatise on Twilights.'

ALI (Hist.) a name common to several princes and distinguished persons among the Arabs.

ALI, son of Abou-Thaleh, the cousin and son-in-law of Mahomet, by his marriage with Mahomet's daughter Fatema, was elected the caliph, or fourth successor of Mahomet; but a strong party was formed against him, at the head of which was Ayesha, the widow of Mahomet, backed by Moawyah, governor of Syria, who disputed the caliphate with him. Their dispute being referred to the arbitration of two persons, who gave it against Ali, he was accordingly deposed, and was some time after killed by an assassin in a mosque, in the year 40 of the Hegira, A. D. 650, having reigned not more than four years and a half. Marmol. l'Afrique, l. 2.

ALI, the son of Hosein and grandson of the preceding, distinguished himself at the battle of Kerbela, where he and his father were killed.

ALI, another son of Hosein, surnamed Zein al Abeddin, i. e. the Ornament of the Religious, enjoyed the dignity of iman, and died in the year of the Hegira 75, A. D. 685.

ALI, Ebn Musa, was declared by Al Mamun his successor, but died before him, in the year of the Hegira 204, A. D. 814.

ALI, Ben Mohammed Al Giavad, surnamed Askeri, the 10th or 12th iman of the race of Ali, died of poison, as is suspected, in the reign of Motavakel.

ALI, Ebn Hamed, killed Soliman, the 11th caliph in Spain, of the house of Ommayah, and ascended the Moslem throne in his place; but having broken his word with Hayran, by whose assistance he effected his purpose, was dethroned and murdered in the same year, namely 407 of the Hegira, A. D. 1017.

ALI, Ben Josef, the third king of Morocco, of the line of the Almoravides, ascended the throne in the year of the Hegira 505, A. D. 1115, and was killed in a battle fought between him and Alphonso II, after a reign of five years.

ALI, Curdi, a prince of the Curds in the time of Tamerlane, who gave great trouble to that conqueror as he approached their country.

ALI, Thaheri, a prince who reigned in Jemen, or Arabia Felix, and was, as is said, of the race of the Ajubites.

ALI, Soltan, was the 17th successor of Jenghiz Khan, in Great Buckaria. He died about the year of the Hegira 733, A. D. 1343.

ALI, Bey, a prince of Kelat, revolted against Timur Bek, and after committing many acts of treachery, was put to death.

ALI, Pasha, one of the greatest captains in the Ottoman empire, served under Amurath IV, Ibrahim, and Mahomet IV, and died in 1663.

ALI, Bey, an adventurer and a formidable opponent to the Ottoman empire, was born in 1728. His father being a Greek priest, he was intended for that profession, but was one day surprised by robbers and carried to Grand Cairo, where he was sold to Ibrahim, a lieutenant of the Janissaries, and from that condition rose to be bey, or governor of Egypt. He assisted the Russians against the Turks, and being engaged in a desperate conflict with Abou Dahab, one of his own generals and friends who had turned against him, he died in 1773, of the wounds he received, eight days after the battle, in the 45th year of his age. He had governed Egypt with so much wisdom and humanity, that the Egyptians deplored his death as a public calamity.

ALI, Bey, first interpreter at the Ottoman court in the 17th century, spoke 17 languages. He was a Pole by birth, and his real name was Albert-Be-Bouski; but being carried away by the Tartars, and sold to the Turks, he was brought up in their religion, notwithstanding he did not lose his regard for the Christian religion, and would in all probability have come to England and entered the church if he had not died in 1675. He translated the catechism of the church of England, and the whole Bible, into the Turkish language, the latter of which remains in MS. in the library of Leyden; besides which he composed a grammar and lexicon of the Turkish language, also 'Tractatus Alberti Bobovii, &c. de Turcarum Liturgia, Peregrinatione Meccana,

Circumcisione, Ægrotorum Visitatione, &c. cum Notis T. Hyde, Oxon. 1691; and 'Dialogi Turcici.'

ALIACMON (Geog.) or Haliacmon, a river of Macedonia flowing into the Ægean sea, now Pelecus. Claudian gives it the epithet of rapidus.

Bell. Gel. v. 179.

Et frustra rapidum damnant Aliacmona Bessi.

ALIAMET, James (Biog.) a French engraver, was born in 1728, and died in 1788. Among his best engravings are six large plates, which represent the battle of the Chinese with the Tartars.

ALIAMET, Francis Germain, a brother of the preceding, is known in England by some engravings executed for Messrs. Boydell.

ALIATAN (Hist.) a king of the Arabians, in Spain, who took Lisbon, in conjunction with Alphonso II, king of Castille, and died in the year of the Hegira 204, A. D. 814, while at the head of his army, which was going to attack Barcelona.

ALICANT (Geog.) a sea-port of Valencia, in Spain, supposed to be the ancient Alone of Ptolemy and Melu, was taken from the Moors in 1264, by James I, king of Arragon. Its castle, which had been previously reckoned impregnable, was taken by the English in 1706, and again by the French and Spaniards, after a siege of almost two years, when part of the rock was blown up. It is seated on the Mediterranean, on a bay of the same name, 85 miles S. Valencia, lon. 0° 32' W., lat. 38° 16' N.

ALICE (Hist.) daughter of Theobald IV, count of Champagne, married Louis VII king of France, by whom she had in 1165, a son called Philip Augustus. During her son's absence in the Holy Land she acted as queen regent, and died after a prudent government in 1206.

ALIGERNE (Ecc.) an abbot of Mont Cassin in 949, was famous for the discipline which he preserved in his abbey, and the zeal with which he defended the rights of his monastery.

ALIGHIERI, Louis (Biog.) a lawyer of Verona, in the 16th century, whose family produced many distinguished men, among others the celebrated Dante.

ALIGRE (Hist.) formerly written Haligre, the name of an illustrious house, who held the seignory of Riviere for many years, and produced several great men, of whom the following are the principal:

ALIGRE, Stephen d', the first of that name, and the first chancellor of France, after having filled several important offices of state under Henry IV and Lewis XIII died in 1635.

ALIGRE, Stephen d', son of the preceding, after filling many high offices, rose to the dignity of chancellor under Louis XIV in 1674, which he retained till his death, in 1677.

ALIGRE, Francis d' (Ecc.) third son of the preceding, and a monk of the order of St. Augustin, was distinguished for his zeal and fidelity in the discharge of all his functions, ecclesiastical and civil. He died in 1712, aged 92.

ALIGRE, Charles d', brother of the preceding, and abbot of S. Riquier, in Ponthieu, gave up his revenues to the value of 2000 livres, for the benefit of the monks of his abbey, and died in 1695.

ALIMENTUS, L. Cincius (Biog.) an historian, who wrote an account of the second Punic war, in which he says he was himself taken by Annibal. Livy quotes him on different occasions. Livy, l. 21, c. 38, &c.

ALINDA (Geog.) Ἀλινδα, a town of Caria, whose queen Ada adopted Alexander the Great as her son. Arrian. de Exped. Alex.

ALINDA (Numis.) a medal of this town represents a club, with the skin, &c. of a lion, within a crown of laurel, emblematical of Hercules; inscription ΑΛΙΝΔΕΩΝ.

ALIONE (Geog.) a town of the Brigantes in Britain, now Lancaster.

ALIPHERUS (Hist.) Ἀλιφῆρος, the son of Lycæon, and founder of Aliphera, according to Pausanias.

ALIPHIUS (Ecc.) bishop of Tagusta, was the disciple and friend of St. Augustin, with whom he was baptized in 387, and lived the greater part of his life.

ALIPHIUS (Hist.) a geographer of Antioch, who is supposed to be the same as was made governor of Britain, by the emperor Julian, to whom he dedicated his work on geography. He was afterwards exiled for following magical divinations.

ALIPRANDI, Bonamente (Biog.) an historian, or antiquary of Italy, died in 1417, leaving, among other things, a Metrical Chronicle, or History of Mantua, which Muratori has published in the fifth volume of his 'Antiquitates Italiæ Mediæ Ævi.'

ALIRROTHIUS (Myth.) Ἀλιρρόθιος, a son of Neptune, who was killed by Mars for offering violence to Alcippe, his daughter. Mars was brought to trial by Neptune for this offence on the hill at Athens, which on that account is called Areopagus. Servius, however, gives a different account of Alirrothius's death. Apollodor. l. 3; Paus. l. 1, c. 21; Serv. Virg. Georg. l. 1, v. 18.

ALISCHET (Hist.) a vizier of Algiaptu and Abusaid, procured the death of his learned colleague Raschideddin.

ALISCHIR (Hist.) a general of the sultan Hassan, who shared the government of Samarcand with him, and in the end became absolute master of it by himself.

ALISCHIR, a prince or emir of Khorasan, in the year of the Hegira 904, A. D. 1514, had a rich library in the city of Heret, of which he allowed the inspection to the historian Khondemir.

ALISE (Geog.) a village of Burgundy, in France, which is the ancient Alesia. [Vide Alesia.]

ALISO (Geog.) Ἐλισίον, a river of Germany, flowing into the Lippe, near Paderbon, now Alme. Ptolemy mentions a place near the Rhine, which he calls Ἀλίσιον. Vell. Pat. l. 2, c. 120; Tac. Annal. l. 2, c. 7; Dio. l. 54.

ALISONTA (Geog.) a river of Germany, which runs into the Maese, supposed to be the present Alsit. Ausonius applies the epithet of felix to it.

Auson. Mosell. v. 370.

AMALFI (Geog.) or Amalphi, a small town of Naples, in the principality of Salerno. 10 miles S. W. Salerno. Lon. 14° 20' E., lat. 40° 35' N.

History of Amalfi.

This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages was called Melphis, was taken by the emperor Lotharius II, in 1133, when the place was given up to pillage; but the emperor would have no other share of the booty than a volume of the 'Pandects o. Justinian,' which were preserved there. It was afterwards famous as the birth-place of Flavio Gioia, the reputed inventor of the magnetic needle. This city belonged at first to the house of St. Severin, afterwards to that of Piccolomini, and in the 17th century it was erected into a duchy in favour of Octavio Piccolomini. Amalfi is an archbishop's see, having Capri, Scala, Minori, Lettere, and Ravello, for suffragans. Pope Nicholas II assembled a council here in 1059, for the purpose of better regulating the election of popes, and preventing the schisms which had so frequently been produced by setting up of antipopes. *Sgon. de Regn. Non picta phuretras, et securigera manu

Peltatu Amazon.

Propertius speaks of their bared breasts.

Propert. l. 3, eleg. 12, v. 15.

Qualis Amazonidum nudatis bellica mammis Thermodontæis turba lavatur aquis.

Their mode of cohabiting occasionally with the male sex, and their treatment of their male offspring, has been variously stated by different writers; and Strabo questions their existence altogether, as a nation; but Diodorus, Justin, and others, specify their queens by name, of which the following are the principal:

Queens of the Amazons.

Marthesia or Marpesia, Μαρπησία and Lampædo, reigned conjointly in the time of Ægeus. They are said to have built Ephesus, and other cities of Asia Minor.

Antiope and Orethya, were conquered by Hercules and Theseus. Apollodorus calls Antiope, Hippolyte; and Apollonius calls Orethya, Otrere.

Penthesilea, went as an auxiliary to Priam, to the Trojan war, where she is said to have been killed by Achilles.

Minithya or Thalestris, their last queen, paid a visit to Alexander the Great, that she might have offspring from so warlike a prince. Hom. Il. 1. 3, &c. & Eustath. in Il.; Herod. 1. 4, c. 110; Apollod. 1. 2, c. 3; Dionys. Hal. 1. 4; Diodor. 1. 2; Strab. 1. 11; Hygin. Fab. 14; Plin. 1. 6, c. 7, &c.; Plut. in Thes.; Justin. 1. 2, c. 4; Quint. Curt. c. 5; Plol. 1. 5, c. 10; Paus. 1. 7, c. 2; Palæphat. de Incred.

AMAZONES (Numis.) were represented on medals mostly with a battle-axe, of which an example is given under the head of Amisus. [Vide Amisus]

AMAZONIA (Hist.) a mistress of the emperor Commodus, on whose account he descended into the arena to fight as a common gladiator. He took the name of Amazonius, and gave it also to the month of December in honour of her. Lamp. in Vit.

AMAZONIA (Geog.) a country of South America, so called by its discoverer Francisco Orellana, who, sailing down the river Amazon for the first time in 1580, observed on its banks numbers of women in arms, wherefore he designated the country and the river by the names which they now bear. Amazonia is 1400 miles long, and 1960 broad, being bounded on the N. by Terra Firma and Guayana; on the E. by the Atlantic ocean and Brazil; on the S. by Paraguay; and on the W. by Peru. The Spaniards have made many unsuccessful attempts to settle there, but the Portuguese have some settlements between Cape North and the mouth of the Amazon.

AMAZONIUM (Geog.) Ἀμαζονείον, a place in Attica, where Theseus defeated the Amazons. Plut. in Thes. Also a town of Cumæ, where the Amazons lived. Steph. Byz.

AMERBACH, Vins, a native of Suabia in the 16th century, at first embraced the doctrines of Luther, but afterwards returned to the Romish church. He died in 1557, leaving the Orations of Isocrates and Demosthenes translated; also translations of the Treatises of St. Chrysostom on Providence, and Epiphanius on the Catholic Faith, &c.

AMERIA (Geog.) 'Ἀμερία, 'Ἀμῆριον, or 'Ἀμῆριον, now Amelia, a city of Umbria, the inhabitants of which were called Amerini. It was built, according to Pliny, on the authority of Cato, 960 years before the Persian war, i. e. 583 years before the building of Rome, A. M. 2900, A. C. 1135, and, according to Festus, had one Amerius for its founder. It is distinguished as the birth-place of Sextus Roscius, so ably defended by Cicero; and its oxiers, Amerinæ salices, are celebrated for their use in training the vine.

Virg. Georg. l. 1, v. 265.

Atque Amerina parant lenta retinacula vitæ.

The gentile name is Amerinus. Cic. pro Sex. Rosc. c. 7; Strab. l. 5; Plin. l. 3, c. 14.

AMERIAS (Biog.) or Amerius, a grammarian of Macedon, often quoted by Athenæus. Athen. l. 1, c. 12, &c.

AMERICA (Geog.) the largest of the four grand divisions of the world.

Extent and Division. America is of such a length as to comprehend the whole of the torrid, besides a considerable part of the temperate and frigid zones, to the extent altogether of not less than 10,000 miles, being in breadth from 1800 to 2000 miles. It is naturally divided into two great continents, namely, North and South America, which are separated from each other by the isthmus of Darien.

North America comprehends

1. The British provinces of Canada, Upper and Lower, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, to which are added New Britain and the island of Cape Breton.

2. The United Provinces, known under the name of the United States, namely, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, &c.

3. The vicerealty of New Spain, comprehending Mexico, Vera Cruz, Merida, &c.
 South America contains Brazil, the Caraccas, Chili, Guiana, Terra Firma, New Grenada, Amazonia, Peru, Chili, Paraguay, and Patagonia.
 The principal towns in North and South America are as follow:

Principal Towns in North America.

Quebec in Lower Canada.
Halifax in Nova Scotia.
Boston in New England.
Philadelphia	.. in Pennsylvania.
New York in New York.
Halifax in Virginia.
Savanna in Georgia.
Charleston in S. Carolina.
New Orleans	.. in West Florida.
Mexico in Mexico.

Principal Towns in South America.

Carthagena	.. in Terra Firma.
Rio Janeiro	.. in Brazil.
St. Salvador	.. in Brazil.
Quito in Quito.
Lima in Peru.
Truxillo in Peru.
Buenos Ayres	.. in Paraguay.
Jago in Chili.

Mountains, Capes, Isthmuses, &c. The most considerable chains of mountains are the Andes, in South America, and the Alleghany mountains in the North, which form immense ranges, that are also reckoned to be the loftiest in the world. Among these the mountain Potosi, in Peru, is the richest. The principal capes, isthmuses, &c. are Cape Horn, Cape St. Maria, Cape St. Lucas, Cape Breton, Isthmus of Darien, &c.

Rivers, Lakes, Gulfs, Straits, &c. The rivers of America are the grandest in the world, the principal of which are the river St. Lawrence, the Mississippi, the Amazons, the Orinoco, the river de la Plata, &c. The lakes are Lake Superior, Michigan, Huron, Erie, Ontario, Maracaibo, Valencia, &c. The principal gulfs are the Gulf of Mexico, of Florida, of California, of St. Lawrence, &c.; and the bays are the Bay of Honduras, Hudson's Bay, Baffin's Bay, &c. The straits are the Straits of Magellan, Davis's Strait, Hudson's Strait, &c.

Islands. The principal islands are those which are known under the name of the West Indies, or West India Islands, as Jamaica, St. Domingo, Cuba, the Bahamas, the Caribbees, Barbadoes, Trinidad, Tobago, &c.

History. America is generally supposed to have been first discovered by Christopher Columbus, in 1492, although it received its name from Americus Vespucius, who, having three years after drawn up a particular account of this newly-discovered country, obtained the credit of being considered as its discoverer. Whether any part of this continent were known to the ancients or not is a matter of some uncertainty; but it may be collected from different writers that they looked upon the three continents, Europe, Asia, and Africa, not to be the extent of the habitable globe. Plato, in his 'Timæus,' makes mention of an island called Atlantis, which, according to the account given by the Egyptian priests to Solon, exceeded any of the three continents in extent; and this narrative, though considered by some as fabulous, is confirmed by Proclus, Porphyry, and others. Aristotle, in the book attributed to him, 'De Mundo,' intimates that there are other islands besides Europe, Africa, and Asia, which were then known; and Diodorus expressly states that the Carthaginians discovered a large island beyond the Pillars of Hercules, which, for reasons of state, they would not suffer to become known to the Europeans. Plut. in Tim.; Aristot. de Mund.; Diod. Sic. l. 2; Plin. l. 2, c. 92; Tertull. de Pall. c. 2, et Apolog. c. 40; Arnob. adv. Gent. l. 1; Turnel. Adv. l. 20, c. 11; Voss. de Mathem. c. 42.

Among the number of those who contributed to the discovery of America were Alonzo de Ojeda, Nunez de Balboa, Ferdinand Cortez, and Francis Pizarro, by which two last adventurers Mexico and Peru were discovered and conquered. At the time when the Spaniards arrived in those countries, Motezuma was the king of the Mexicans, and Ahathualpa the inca of the Peruvians. The following is a list of the princes who reigned in these countries from the foundation of the two monarchies to their conquest by the Spaniards.

Succession of the Kings of Mexico.

Acamapixtli, who died after a useful reign of more than 40 years, during which he did much towards the improvement of the country, and was succeeded by Vitzilocutli, his son, who was unanimously elected to the throne, but died after a short reign.

Chilunpopoca, his son, although only ten years of age, was elected; but being treacherously murdered by the Tepeacans, a neighbouring people, he was succeeded by his uncle, Izcoalt, who, among other wise regulations, confided the election of the Mexican princes to six electors, who were to be themselves princes. Izcoalt died after a prosperous reign of 12 years.

Motezuma I, a warlike prince, who died after a reign of 28 years, leaving the reputation of an experienced general and a wise monarch.

Tezazic, son of the preceding, a weak prince, was poisoned after an inglorious reign of four years.

Axayaca, brother of the preceding, reigned prosperously and wisely for 11 years.

Autzal died after a reign of 11 years, deeply regretted by his subjects.

Motezuma II, a magnanimous but unfortunate prince, was killed by his own subjects in a seditious tumult, which was occasioned by the invasion of the Spaniards.

Quilava, who, dying in the first year of his reign, was succeeded by Guatimozin, nephew and son-in-law to Motezuma, who made the last desperate effort to rescue his country from the Spaniards; but being taken prisoner in the struggle, and afterwards convicted of conspiring against his enemies, was hanged, with some of his adherents, by order of Cortez in 1521. With him terminated the Mexican monarchy, and the existence of his nation.

Succession of the Incas of Peru.

Manco Capac, the founder of the Peruvian monarchy, was fabled to be the offspring of the sun and moon; and his wife, who was also his sister, was named Caya Mama. They are said to have been sent by their parents among the Peruvians to refine their morals, introduce religion, and establish good government. Manco Capac reigned between 30 and 40 years, after which, as he informed his subjects, he returned to his father. He was succeeded by his son, Sinchi Roca, who improved and enlarged the institutions of his parent, during a long and prosperous reign.

Illogue Yupanqui, succeeded his father; and after a reign of some years, in which he was devoted no less to arms than to the arts, he died, with the reputation of being the greatest captain and statesman that had yet filled the Peruvian throne.

Mayta Capac, son of the preceding, died in the 30th year of his reign, full of honour and glory, acquired both in peace and war.

Capac Yupanqui, succeeded his father, and displayed, during a reign of many years, all the qualities of a prudent, politic, and brave monarch.

Roca imitated the virtues of his father during a reign of 50 years.

Yahuarhuac was a less wise and happy prince than any of his predecessors, being compelled by the rebellion of his subjects to resign the government to his son.

Virachoa, who rendered a long reign illustrious by the splendour of his conquests and the wisdom of his government.

Pachacatec, who died after a long and glorious reign, and was succeeded by Yupanqui, who had rendered himself popular by his military exploits during his father's life-time, distinguished his reign by the conquest of Chili.

Tupac Yupanqui, the son and successor of the preceding, extended the boundaries of the Peruvian empire by his conquest.

Huana Capac, his son and successor, completed the conquest of Quito, which he left at his death to his natural son Atahualpa, and thereby laid the foundation for the civil war which raged in Peru on the arrival of the Spaniards.

Huascar, the 13th inca of the Peruvians, was engaged at the period of the Spanish invasion in a civil war with his brother Ahutualpa, who, after three successful battles, took him prisoner, and mounted the throne in his place. He was soon afterwards put to death by his brother's order, to prevent him from obtaining his liberty by the help of the Spaniards.

Atahualpa, the usurper of his brother's throne, was soon compelled to defend his ill-gotten kingdom against the Spaniards, by whom he was taken prisoner and beheaded.

Manco Capac II, brother of Huascar, succeeded to the tottering throne of his ancestors, and endeavoured, in vain, to regain his independence. After having escaped from the hands by whom he was taken prisoner, he was accidentally killed by a refugee Spaniard, who had sought his protection. After his death the Indians chose Sayri Tapac, the nearest akin to Manco Capac, to preserve the dignity and title of an inca; and on his death, which happened soon after, he was succeeded by Tupac Amra, whose violent death on the scaffold, by order of Francisco de Toledo, put an end to the male race of the blood royal, and to the empire of the Peruvians. This happened in 1541, since which time Mexico, Peru, and other parts of South America, have been in the hands of the Spaniards and Portuguese; whilst the Northern parts of this continent were colonized by Great Britain, and remained subject to the British crown till the period when they asserted their own independence, and established a republic, under the name of the United States of North America, in 1776, which, after a seven years' war, was finally ratified by the peace with England in 1783.

AMISTRATUS (Geog.) vide Ameistratus.

AMISUS (Geog.) 'Αμύσος, a maritime town of Pontus, now called by the Greeks Simsoni, or Samsoun; and by the Turks Amid, or Hemid; which Strabo designates ἀσφόλογος, illustrious; was built by the Milesians, colonized by the Athenians, subjected by the kings of Persia, liberated by Alexander the Great, and after falling into the hands of the kings of Pontus, was taken from Mithridates, and restored to its liberty by Lucullus. Pharnaces afterwards gained possession of it, and Caesar liberated it; but Anthony having subjected it to regal power, it was governed by Strato the tyrant, from whom it regained its liberty, and was confirmed as a free city by Augustus. Cic. pro Man. Leg. c. 8; Strab. l. 12; Plin. l. 6; Plut. in Lucull.; Polyæn. l. 7.

AMISUS (Numis.) this town struck several medals of Adrian, Sabina, Ælius Cæsar, Antoninus Pius, Commodus, Caracalla, Diadumenianus, and Maximilianus; and dated its epocha from its liberation from the tyranny of Strato, U. C. 721, as appears from the inscription on a medal of Ælius Cæsar; AMICΟΥ ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΙΑΣ ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΥ ΒC; i. e. Amisi Liberæ suis legibus Viventis, anno 202. Some of its inscriptions show its alliance with the Milesians, as AMICHNΩΝ ΜΙΑΙΧΙΩΝ, Amisicorum Milesiorum, i. e. Concordia; also with the town of Amastris, a medal of which, as in the annexed cut, represents two Amazons turreted, and standing by an altar with their right hands joined, one bearing an axe, and the other a spear; to denote that these two towns, which deduced their origin from two Amazons named Amisus and Amastris, entered into an alliance with each other.

AMITERNINUS (Geog.) the gentile name for the people or country of Amiternum, contracted into Amiternus by the poets, as the Amiterna cohors of Virgil; Amiternus ager of Martiul. [Vide Amiternum]

AMITERNUM (Geog.) 'Αμῑτέρνης or 'Αμῑτέρνον, a town of the Sabines, according to Strabo; or of the Vestini, according to Ptolemy; illustrious as the birth-place of Sallust, was situated near the fountain of Alernus. Amiterno was once a bishop's see, and near its ruins, in Abruzzo, have been erected a burg called Vittorino, after St. Victorinus, its first bishop, who suffered martyrdom. The gentile name was Amiterninus, which Virgil has contracted for the sake of the verse into Amiternus, when speaking of the people, whom he says assisted Turnus against Æneas.

AMPHIPOLIS (Bibl.) Ἀμφίπολις, the town described under Geography, is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles. Acts xviii.

AMPHIPOLIS (Geog.) a town built by an Athenian colony, in the country between Macedonia and Thrace, from which the original inhabitants, the Edonians, were expelled. The colonists who succeeded them having taken part with the Lacedæmonians against the Athenians, were engaged in frequent wars from the time of Philip, and Amphipolis was taken by Perdiccas II, in the 89th Olympiad, A. C. 424. It was thus called because it was surrounded by the river Strymon, or, according to Suidas, because it was entirely surrounded by habitations. Its original names, however, were Ἐννία ὄδοι, according to Herodotus; Urbs Martis, according to Suidas; and Myrica, &c. according to Stephanus; but afterwards called by the Greeks Chrysopolis, and the Turks Emboli, or Chrysopoli, by which it is now known. It was formerly an archbishop's see. Herod. 1. 7, c. 114; Thucyd. 1. 4, c. 102, &c.; Diod. 1. 11, 12, &c.; Liv. 44, c. 45; Plin. 1. 4, c. 10; Steph. Byz.; Suidas, &c.

AMPHIPOLIS (Numis.) medals were struck either by the above-mentioned town or that of Syria, as an independent state, and in honour of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Domitian, M. Aurelius, Faustina, jun., Commodus, Severus, Caracalla, Geta, Macrinus, Alex. Severus, Maximinus, and Valerianus, sen. Their original types were the goat, an ear of corn, or the prow of a ship as in the annexed figure. On the imperial medals the most frequent type was that of Europa sitting on a bull. They also honoured Jupiter, Minerva, and Bacchus, on their medals. The inscriptions AMΦI. AMΦHIΠOΛIT, AMΦHIΠOΛITΩN, AMΦHIΠOΛEITΩN, ΔHMOC AMΦHIΠOΛITΩN. Goltz. in Augusti

AMSTELRODAMUM (Geog.) the town of Amsterdam. [Vide Amsterdam]

AMSTERDAM (Geog.) the capital of Holland, situate at the conflux of the Imsel and Wye. Lon. 4° 52' E., lat. 52° 22' N. This town, which in the Latin of the middle ages was called Amstelrodamum, derived its name from its situation near the river Amstel. It consisted in former ages of a few fishermen's huts, and first acquired the name of a commercial town in the 14th century. It was encompassed with walls in 1482, and has since that period been increasing in wealth and importance, so as to entitle it to the first rank among the trading cities of Europe, which it is likely to preserve, notwithstanding the shock it received during the revolutionary government of France. It surrendered to the king of Prussia in 1787; received the French troops, without resistance, in 1795; and declared first for the restoration of the house of Orange in 1813.

ANACTES (Myth.) Ἀνακτες, or Anaces, Ἀνακες; the name common to the three gods who were fabled to be born at Athens of Jupiter and Proserpine, i. e. according to Cicero, Tritopatreus, Eubuleus, and Dionysius, who were likewise called Dioscuri, and according to Pausanias, Curetes and Cabires; but it is more generally understood to refer to Castor and Pollux, who were honoured as the tutelary deities of Athens. The origin of the name has been variously derived: according to Plutarch, either from ἀνακῆς, carefully, ἀναχῆ, a treaty, in allusion to the treaty between Theseus and the Tyndaridae; or ἀνω, above, that is, above the horizon, in allusion to the stars of Castor and Pollux; but the general supposition is that it is derived from ἀναεῖ, a king, i. e. a guardian, although Vossius thinks that it is a Phœnician word signifying the descendants of Enach. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3, c. 21; Plut. in Thes.; Paus. l. 10, c. ult; Tzetz. in Lycoph.; Voss. de Orig. Idol. l. 1, c. 13.

ANACTORIUM (Geog.) Ἀνακτόριον, Anactoria, a town of Acarnania at the mouth of the bay of Ambracia, which belonged in common to the Corinthians and the Corycæans, whence it was the cause of frequent wars among the Greeks. The Athenians becoming masters of it, gave it into the possession of the Acarnanians; but, according to Pausanias, Augustus planted a colony of Corinthians at Nicopolis, near Actium, of which Anactorium was the emporium. Thucyd. l. 1, c. 55; Scyl. Peripl.; Strab. l. 10; Plin. l. 4, c. 1; Paus. l. 5.

ANACTORIUM (Numis.) this town is known by the inscription ANAKTOPIQN on some medals which represent the head of Achelous, the symbol of Acarnania; as also the figures of Pallas, the Pegasus, and other types.

Hygin. fab. 173, 248.

ANCEUS, son of Neptune and Astypalaea, native of Samos, and an Argonaut, was killed by a wild boar just at the moment that he was going to drink of the fruit of his vineyard, which it had been predicted to him that he should never taste. No sooner had he got the cup into his hand, than he was informed that a wild boar was in his vineyard, upon which he threw down the cup and went in pursuit of it, whence the proverb, Πολλὰ μετὰξὺ πέλει κύλικος καὶ χεῖρος ἄκρον.

Which Horace renders,

Multa cadunt inter calicem supremaque labra.

Better rendered by Cato,

Multum interest inter os et offum.

History of Ancona.

This place, which is the Ancon or Ancona of the ancients, [vide Ancon] still retains a triumphal arch, built to commemorate the munificence of Trajan, who, at his own expense, improved and enlarged the harbour. The town, according to Blondus, was taken by the Goths, and afterwards subject to the Lombards. In the pontificate of Sergius, it was burnt by the Saracens; and in 1532 it fell into the hands of Clement VII, who built a citadel to protect it against the inroads of the Turks. In 1796 it was taken by the French, and in 1799 surrendered to the Austrians. Procop. de Bell. Goth.; Blond. Hist. Roman. l. 13; Leander Albert. Descript. Ital.

ANCRUM, Robert, Earl of (Hist.) of the family of Kerr, mentioned under Heraldry, [vide Kerr and Lothian] the confidential friend of Charles I, when prince of Wales, was his no less faithful adherent in all his troubles, and died in exile on account of his loyalty in 1654, at the age of 76. He was the author of a sonnet in praise of solitude.

ANCUS (Hist.) a prænomén drawn from the Sabines, which Festus derives from ἀγκών, cubitus, signifying one that has a crooked arm. There were two Romans who had this prænomén, namely, Ancus, Publicius, a general of the Latins, who fought against Tullus Hostilius. Dionys. l. 3.

Ancus, Martius, fourth king of Rome, who succeeded Tullus Hostilius, U. C. 115, A. C. 639, and died after a reign of 24 years; in which he showed much firmness and valour, combined with much moderation. He conquered the Latins, the Fidenates, the Volsci, the Veientini, the Sabines, and all the people who ventured to make an attack upon the Romans. He revived the religious institutions of Numa, which had fallen into neglect, and in order to keep down the seditious spirit of the people, he built the first prison. [Vide Plate III] Virgil speaks of him as courting popular favour.

ANGENNES (Hist.) an ancient and noble family of France, which derives its title from Angennes, in the province of Orleans. Many of its members filled the highest posts, of which the following are the most entitled to notice:

ANGENNES, Robert d', was killed at the battle of Agincourt.

ANGENNES, Regnaud d', chamberlain to Charles VI, was employed on many important missions in Germany and elsewhere. He was taken prisoner in a sedition at Paris in 1418, but afterwards recovered his liberty.

ANGENNES, John d', defended Cherbourg for six months against the English in 1417, and is said to have been afterwards beheaded by the king of England, having borne arms against him contrary to his promise.

ANGENNES, John d', second of this name, took in 1442, from the English, the town of Mante, of which he was made governor, as also of the town of Angoulême.

ANGENNES, James d', a favourite of Francis I, was his lieutenant general in Germany.

ANGENNES, Nicholas d', was sent as ambassador extraordinary to queen Elizabeth.

ANGENNES, Julia d', marchioness de Rambouillet, and duchess de Montausier, was governess to the dauphin son of Louis XIV, and maid of honour to Maria Theresa of Austria. She was a lady of distinguished merit and talent.

ANGENNES, Louis d', was ambassador in Spain, in 1581.

ANGENNES, James d', the second of this name, was sent ambassador to England in 1634.

ANGENNES, Charles d', otherwise called Count d'Angennes, was killed at the battle of Malplaquet, in 1709.

ANGENNES, Charles d' (Ecc.) of the same family as the preceding; was sent on a mission to Pius V, by Charles IX; and being created a cardinal in 1570, he assisted at the election of Gregory XIII in 1573.

ANGENNES, Claude d', bishop successively of Paris and of Mans, died in 1601, after having been active in the discharge of his various public duties. Spondan. Cont. Baron. Annal. Ann. 1589, &c.; Thuan. Hist.; Sammarth. Gall. Christ.

ANGERMANNLAND (Geog.) in Latin Angermannia, a northern province of Sweden, filled principally with mountains, rocks, and forests.

ANGERONIA (Myth.) or Angerona, a Roman goddess, so called, as some suppose, because she was said to drive away the disease angina, the quinsy; or ab angendo, i. e. com-primendo, from pressing the mouth to keep silence, because she was the goddess of silence; and her statue was represented with her finger on her mouth. Her festival was called Angeronalia. Varro de Lat. Ling. l. 4; Plin. l. 3, c. 5; Phil. in Num.; Macrob. Sat. l. 1, c. 10.

ANGERS (Geog.) Andegava or Andegavum, the capital of Anjou, or the department of the Maine and Loire, and the birth-place of Menage, is 50 m. E. N. E. Nantes, and 175 S. W. Paris, lon. 0° 33' W. lat. 47° 28' N. It was a bishop's see before the revolution; and its first bishop mentioned in history was Defensor, in the fourth century, since which time it has had many distinguished men to fill the bishopric, and has had five councils held within its walls; namely, in 453, 1269, 1279, 1366, and 1448. Its university was the resort of the German princes and nobility. Its castle, which stands on a rock, and is flanked by 18 towers, was attacked by the Hugonots, but without success. Angers suffered considerably during the Vendean war, when it was the scene of many sanguinary actions. St. Marth. Gall. Christ.; Du Chêne, Antiq.

ANGERVILLE, Richard (Ecc.) vide Augerville.

ANGES, Francis Anthony des (Ecc.) a Jesuit and missionary in Ethiopia, died in 1623, after having translated the commentaries of Maldonat on St. John and St. Matthew, into the Ethiopic language.

ANGES, Jerome des, a Jesuit and missionary in Japan, was burnt alive for his faith at Gedo, in 1623.

ANGES, Pompeius des, a canon of St. Mary the Elder, at Rome, wrote an account of this church.

ANGHIERA, Peter Martyr d' (Biog.) an Italian scholar, was born in 1454 and died in 1526; leaving among his works, 1. 'Opus Epistolarum Petri Martyris Anglerii, Mediolanensis,' fol. 1530; fol. Elzev. 1670. 2. 'De Rebus Oceanicis et Orbe novo Decades,' being a History of the Discoveries of Columbus; taken from the MS. which he sent to the India council in Spain, fol. Paris. 1536. 3. 'De Insulis nuper Inventis,' &c. 4to. Basil. 1521; fol. 1533. 4. 'De Legatione Babylonica Libri Tres,' containing an Account of his Embassy to the Sultan of Egypt, &c. Paul. Jor. Elog. No. 124; Voss. de Hist. Lat. c. 12; Cave, Hist. Lit. vol. ii. p. 239.

ANGILBERT (Ecc.) son of one of the nobles of Pepin's court, married Bertha, daughter of Charlemagne, with whose consent he afterwards retired to the abbey of St. Riquier, of which he was made abbot, and died in 814. He wrote, among other things, a history of his abbey.

ANGILBERT, or Engelbert, was abbot of the monastery of Corbie, with some little interruption, from 859 to 890, when he died.

ANGIOLELLO, John Mario, a native of Vicenza, and afterwards a slave of the young Mustapha during the expedition of Mahomet II into Persia in 1473, wrote, in the Italian and Turkish languages, 'The History of Mahomet II,' which he dedicated to the sultan, and was in consequence kindly received.

ANGITIA (Geog.) a grove in the country of the Marsi, now Silva d'Alba, between Alba and the lake of Fucina. It received its name, as is said, from Medea, who was called Angitia. Virg. Æn. l. 7; Sil. Ital. l. 8; Solin. c. 8; Serr. in Virg.

ANGITULA (Geog.) a river of Italy, and a town in Calabria, now Roccha Angitola.

ANGLESEY, Earl of, Sir Arthur Annesley (Hist.) son of the first viscount Valentia, took an active but not an honourable part in the troubles of the times, and, after siding alternately with the rebels and the royalists, he at length contributed materially to the restoration, for which he was raised to the English peerage. He wrote, 1. 'Truth unveiled in behalf of the Church of England, &c. 4to. 1767. 2. 'A Letter from a Person of Honour in the Country written to the Earl of Castlehaven,' &c. 3. 'The Privileges of the House of Lords and Commons,' &c. 4. 'The King's Right of Indulgence in Spiritual Matters,' &c. 5. 'Memoirs intermixt with Moral, Political, and Historical Observations,' &c. 8vo. 1698.

ANGLESEY, Earl of (Her.) a title which was conferred on Arthur Annesley, second viscount Valentia, who was elevated to the British peerage, by the title of lord Annesley, and the earl of Anglesey, in 1661. This title continued in this family till the death of Arthur Annesley, sixth earl, in 1787, when his son Arthur, not being able to make good his claim, it became extinct.

ANGLESEY, Marquis of, a title enjoyed at present by the family of Paget [vide Paget], which was conferred in 1815 on Henry William Paget, earl of Uxbridge, as a reward for his distinguished valour and military prowess at the battle of Waterloo, where he was wounded, and lost his leg at the close of the engagement. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Paget, marquis of Anglesey, earl of Uxbridge, and baron Paget of Baudesert. The title commonly borne by the eldest son, earl of Uxbridge.

Arms. Quarterly first and fourth sable, on a cross engrailed between four eagles displayed argent, five lions passant of the first, for Paget; second and third, azure nine estoiles, three, three, two, and one, argent for Bayly.

Créal. On a wreath, a demi-tiger sable, tufted and maned argent, and ducally gorged or.

Supporters. Two tigers sable, tufted and maned argent, and ducally gorged or.

Motto. "Per il suo contrario."

ANGLESEY (Geog.) a British island, and one of the most northern counties in Wales, 24 miles long, and 18 broad, is separated from Carnarvonshire by a narrow strait called Menai. It sends two members to Parliament, has two market towns; namely, Beaumaris, the county town, and Holyhead; and is divided into six hundreds, and 77 parishes. Anglesey, which was known to the ancients by the name of Mona, was governed by kings of its own till the time of its conquest by Edward I. It still retains many vestiges of the druidical worship, of which it was the celebrated seat in the time of the Romans.

ANGLI (Geog.) a people of Germany, near the river Elbe, called by Ptolemy Ἀγγελοὶ, and by Procopius Ἀγγελοι. They inhabited that narrow strip of land which is now called Jutland, and originally in the Teutonic Engelland, or narrow land, whence they are supposed to derive their name, unless we suppose with Saxo Grammaticus that they were so called after one of their kings called Angul. They gave their name to Anglia, England.

ANGLIA (Geog.) that part of Britain which was inhabited by the Saxons, and is now called England. [Vide Britannia and England] It was called after the Angli, or Anglo Saxons. [Vide Angli]

ANGLIA East, vide East Anglia.

ANGLICUS, Nicholas (Ecc.) an English Franciscan, and bishop of Assisi, was confessor to pope Innocent IV. He died in 1260, leaving many works which are not now extant.

ANGLICUS, Gilbertus, physician to Hubert, archbishop of Canterbury, about the time of king John, left a treatise on medicine, which he entitled a compendium; which has been printed at different times in 4to. Lyons, 1510; Geneva, 1608.

ANGLICUS, vide Richard.

ANGLURE (Geog.) a small town of Champagne, in France, which gave its name to an ancient and illustrious family.

ANGOLA (Geog.) a small kingdom of Western Africa, anciently called Abonda, or Ambonda, afterwards Dongo, and by the Portuguese Angola.

Boundaries. It is bounded on the N. by Congo Proper; E. by Metamba; S. by Benguela; and W. by the Atlantic.

Extent and Division. The kingdom of Angola forms a coast of more than eight degrees, or 480 miles, and is divided into 17 provinces.

Towns. The capital of Angola is Loanda, which was built by Paulo dias de Novais, the first governor of Angola; besides which there is Cambamba, Benguela, and other small places.

Rivers and Islands. The two principal rivers are the Danda and the Couda; besides which there are the Rio Longo, Rimba, Cubogi, &c. The principal islands are the Loanda, the Massander, and Motehiana.

History. Angola was at first a province of Congo, until an ambitious governor named Ngola, or Angola, shook off the Congoese yoke, and erected it into an independent kingdom. He was succeeded by his eldest daughter Zanda Riangola, who, being shortly after murdered by her sister in revenge for the murder of her children, was succeeded by her nephew Ngola Chilvagni I, who, after a warlike and prosperous reign, named his youngest son Dambi Angola his successor. His reign was short and cruel, and he was succeeded by Ngola Chilvagni II, a warlike and successful prince, who dying childless, Ngingha Angola, great nephew to Ngola Chilvagni I, was elected in his stead, but died after a short and bloody reign, leaving the throne to his son and successor Bandi Angola, who, being more cruel than his father, was at length murdered by his subjects. In his reign, the Portuguese, who had already made a settlement in Congo, found favour for some time at his court; but a misunderstanding arising between them, he would have cut them all off if they had not left the kingdom. The Portuguese availed themselves of these circumstances to subdue the greater part of the country, which they effected in the course of the two following reigns; namely, of Ngola Mbanda and Zingha, a son and daughter. The former was soon reduced to the necessity of poisoning himself in order to escape falling into the hands of the enemy; but Zingha, who was a princess of extraordinary valour, and masculine spirit, gave them so much trouble that they at length concluded a treaty with her, leaving her a part of her former dominions. She was succeeded by her sister Barbara, who dying after a short reign, her husband Mona Zingha seized the throne, but was defeated and slain by Don Francisco, the only surviving male heir to the throne of Angola; after whose death this country was governed by a viceroy from Portugal; and since that time it has been the chief seat for the nefarious traffic with slaves.

ANGOSCIOLA, Sophonisha (Biog.) or Angussola, an Italian paintress, was born in 1533 at Cremona. She excelled particularly in portraits, among the first of which was that of her father between his two children. She also took a portrait of herself playing on a lute, and that of one of her sisters, besides some historical pieces.

ANGOSCIOLA, Lucia and Eugenia, two sisters of the preceding, and also paintresses, were almost equally distinguished with their sister in the art of portrait painting.

ANGOULEME, Charles de Valois duke d' (Hist.) natural son of Charles IX, received from Louis XIII the duchy of Angoulême, and was very instrumental in bringing Henry IV to the throne, but was afterwards implicated in Biron's conspiracy, and also in a treasonable attempt in concert with his uterine sister, the marchioness de Verneuil, for which he was condemned to lose his head, but the sentence was commuted for perpetual imprisonment. He was however sent four years after on an embassy to the emperor Ferdinand II. In 1628, he opened the famous siege of Rochelle; and, after taking part in the war of Languedoc, Germany, and Flanders, he died in 1650, leaving, among his works as a writer, 1. 'Memoires Tres Particulieres du Duc d'Angoulême pour servir a l'Histoire des Regnes de Henri III et Henri IV,' 12mo. 1662. 2. 'Les Harangues prononcées en l'Assemblée de M. M. les Princes Protestants d'Allemagne,' 8vo. 1620. 3. 'Le Generale et Fidèle Relation de tout ce qui s'est passé en l'Isle de Rè,' &c. 4. A Translation of Diego de Torze's History of the Kingdoms of Morocco, Fez, &c.; besides a folio volume of MS. letters, which are said to have been written by him.

ANGOULEME (Geog.) a capital of Angoumois, a former province of France, is situated on the river Charente, 50 miles W. S. W. Lemoges. Lon. 0° 9' E. lat. 45° 39' N. It is a town of such antiquity that its origin is unknown, and has been deduced by some from the reign of Tarquin the Proud. It was known among the ancients by the names of Engolisma, Ecollesina, Equolesina, Aquilimensis, Inculisma, and Ratiastum. It passed from the hands of the Romans into those of the Visigoths, from whom it was taken by Clovis in 508. It suffered much from the inroads of the Normans, who ruined it in the ninth century, and killed its count Teirpion in an engagement; and, in the 16th century, it was taken and pillaged more than once by the Hugonots. Angoulême and Angoumois, which belonged originally to Aquitaine, was converted into a county by Charles the Bald, and was governed by counts till the time of Philip the Fair, when it reverted to the crown. It was erected by Francis I into a duchy in favour of his mother, and has since, at different times, been a royal title. Gregor. Turon. Hist. l. 2; Aimon. Hist. Fran.; Du Chêne Recherches des Antiq. de France; Saint Marth. Genealog. de France, &c.

ANGOUMOIS (Geog.) a late province of France, in Aquitania [vide Angoulême], now included in the department of the Charente.

ANGRIANI, Michael (Biog.) Aygnani, or Aignan, commonly called Michael of Bologna, a Carmelite of the 14th century, died in 1416. He wrote Commentaries on the Psalms and other Parts of the Bible.

ANGUIER, Francis and Michael (Biog.) sons of a mechanic in Eu, a town of Normandy, became eminent sculptors, and embellished Paris with many specimens of their skill. Francis, who died in 1699, executed, among other things, the mausoleum of Montmorency, at Moulins, and the four figures on the tomb of the duke de Longueville at Paris. Michael, who died in 1686, executed the ornaments on the gate of St. Dennis, &c.

ANGUILLARA, John Andrew d' (Biog.) an Italian poet of the 16th century, was born at Sutri, in Tuscany, of very poor parents. He wrote, 1. 'Oedipo,' a tragedy, partly original, and partly from Sophocles. 2. 'Canzoni.' 3. Poetical Arguments for all the Cantos of Orlando Furioso. 4. Four Capitoli or Satires. 5. Translations of Ovid, and the first Book of the Æneid.

ANGUILLARA, Louis, or Aloyrio, an Italian physician and botanist of the 16th century, died in 1570, leaving, among his works, a botanical collection entitled 'Semplici dell' Eccelente M. Anguillara, li quali in piu pareri a diversi nobili nomini scritte appagano et nuovamente da M. Giovanni Marinello mandati in luce,' 8vo. Venice, 1561, and reprinted in the same year.

ANGURA (Geog.) the ancient Ancyra, a city of Asiatic Turkey, in Natolia, and a Greek archbishop's see.

ANGUS, More (Hist.) or the Great, styled the Lord of the Isles, of the family of Macdonald [vide Macdonald], entertained Robert Bruce at a time when he had been refused an asylum elsewhere, and raised 2000 men, with whom he engaged at the battle of Bannockburn, where king Edward II was defeated, and he displayed much valour.

ANGUS, George, fourth Earl of, of the family of Douglas, mentioned under Heraldry [vide Douglas], was one of the commissioners to conclude a treaty with England in 1449. He was standing by the side of king James II when he was killed at Roxburg in 1460.

ANGUS, Archibald, fifth Earl of, was one of the Scottish peers, who combined against king James III. He was afterwards high in favour with James IV, whom he attended on his fatal expedition into England, where his two sons fell at the battle of Flodden. He himself having received an affront had previously withdrawn from the army, and died in 1514.

ANGUS, Archibald, sixth Earl of, became brother-in-law to Henry VIII by his marriage with Margaret, sister to the latter, and queen Dowager; but, although afterwards divorced from her, he became one of the council of the regent, and took an active part in all the troubles of the times.

ANGUS, William, tenth Earl of, becoming a Roman catholic, engaged with the earls of Errol and Huntly in a treasonable correspondence with the king of Spain for the re-establishment of that religion; but, failing in their attempt, he retired to the continent.

ANGUS, James, Earl of, son of the second marquis of Douglas, raised the regiment now called the 26th foot of Cameronians, and, after much active service, fell at the battle of Steinkerk in 1692.

ANGUS (Geog.) another name for Forfarshire.

ANHALT (Geog.) a principality of Germany, 42 miles long and 10 broad, the capital of which is Zerbst. It is watered by the two rivers, the Salde and the Mulda. This principality gives its name to one of the most ancient houses, not only of Germany, but of all Europe, in so much that some have been pleased to trace its origin from Ascanias, the son of Gomer, and great grandson of Noah. It is however certain that the princes of Anhalt of the present day are descended from Bernard, son of the emperor Albert, surnamed the Bear, to whose son Henry the emperor Frederic Barbarossa gave the title of prince of Anhalt. Since Joachim Ernest, prince of Anhalt in the 16th century, this house has branched out into the houses of Bernburg, Hatzendorf, Zerbst, &c.

ANHOLT (Geog.) an island of Denmark, in the Categat, which was taken by the English in 1810, who defeated the Danes in 1811 in their attempt to retake it.

ANI (Bibl.) אֵנִי, a levite and a musician, who accompanied the ark when brought by David to Jerusalem. 1 Chron. xv. 18.

ANIANUS (Biog.) an Egyptian monk in the reign of Arcadius, wrote a chronicle of the emperors. Voss. de Hist. Græc. l. 2, c. 20.

ANIANUS, a lawyer in the time of Alaric, king of the Visigoths, in Spain, about 484, published a work on the laws of the emperor Theodosius, and translated the Homilies of St. Chrysostom. He is confounded by some with the preceding. Sigebert. de Script. Eccles. c. 70; Voss. de Hist. Græc. l. 2, &c.; Mir. in Auct. de Script. Eccles.; Possevin. &c.

ANIANUS, a Latin author of the fifth century, who was one of the defenders of Pelagius against S. Augustin and others. S. August. contra Jul. c. 8; Hieron.; Du Pin, Bibl. des Aul.

ANIANUS, a Benedictine of the 16th century, of Mount Cassel, in Flanders, composed a chronicle from the commencement of the world to 1457, which was never printed.

ANIAM (Bibl.) אֲנִיָּא, son of Shemida of Manasseh. 1 Chron. vii. 19.

ANICETUS (Myth.) Ἀνικητος, a son of Hercules by Hebe, the goddess of youth.

ANICETUS, prefect of the Pretorian cohort, under the tyrant Magnentius, was killed A. D. 350, at the taking of the city of Rome by Nepotian. Aurel. Victor.

ANICETUS (Ecc.) a Syrian who was elected pope after Pius I, A. D. 156, in the reign of Antoninus, and the consulship of Tertullus and Sacerdos, according to the Chronicle of Alexandria. He died after having governed the church for 11 years, according to Eusebius; but did not suffer martyrdom, if we may believe the more ancient accounts of him. Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 4, c. 15; Baron. Annal. ann. 167; Du Pin, Biblioth. &c.

ANICH, Peter (Biog.) an astronomer of Germany, and mechanic, was born in 1723, and died in 1766. Besides constructing a pair of globes from the effort of his own genius, he drew a set of maps, which were published at Vienna, entitled, 'Tyrolis Chorographia, delineata a Petro Anich et Blasio Hueber, curante Igno Weinhart.'

ANICHINI, Lewis (Biog.) a Venetian engraver, whose engravings of the medals of Henry II, &c. have been greatly valued.

ANICHINI, the name of another engraver, of whom but little is known.

ANICIA, gens (Hist.) or Anicii, a family originally plebeian, that rose to distinction in the state, particularly in the later period of Rome. [Vide Anicius]

ANICIA, the surname of Proba Falconia, wife of Anicius Probus, who was as illustrious as her husband for virtue and talent, and highly praised by St. Chrysostom, St. Augustin, and St. Jerom. From different fragments of the verses of Virgil, collected into cantos, she composed a Life of Jesus Christ. She was the mother of the consuls Olibrius and Probus, the former of whom married Juliana, by whom he had a daughter, named Demetriades. These two ladies were not inferior to their mother and grandmother Anicia. S. Chrysost., S. August., & S. Hieron. apud Biblioth. Pat. tom. viii. sub Nomine Proba; Zosim. l. 6; Claudian. de Consul. Olib. et Prob.

ANICIUS GALLUS, Lucius, a prætor, U. C. 585, A. C. 169, triumphed over the Illyrians and their king Gentius. Liv. l. 45, c. 26.

ANICIUS GALLUS, Lucius, son of Lucius, and grandson of the preceding, was a colleague in the consulship with Corn. Cethegus, U. C. 585, A. C. 160. The vintage in his consulship being plentiful, gave rise to the proverb, Vinum Anicianum, for any thing excellent. Cic. Brut. c. 83.

ANICIUS, Cerealis, a consul in the reign of Nero, killed himself because he was suspected of being implicated in a conspiracy against the emperor. Tac. Annal. l. 15, c. 74; l. 16, c. 17.

ANICIUS, Maximus, a proconsul under Trajan.

ANICIUS, Faustus, a lieutenant of the emperor Severus in Dacia, A. D. 203; also a Proprætor Augustorum, as we learn from an inscription. Spon. Miscell. Erud. Antiq. p. 304.

ANICIUS, Festus, a proconsul of Asia in 217-218, under the emperor Macrinus.

ANICIUS, Faustus, a consul under Diocletian. Idat. Chron.

ANICIUS, Julianus, the first Christian in the family, was consul in 322, in the reign of Constantine; governor of Tarragona in 316; and continued in the prefecture of Rome from 326 to 329. Idat. Chron.; Prudent. in Symmach.

ANICIUS, Paulinus, a prefect of Rome under Constantine in 331-332.

ANICIUS, Paulinus, the Younger, was proconsul of Asia and the Hellespont, and afterwards consul in 334.

ANICIUS PROBUS, Sextus, a consul in 371, and one of the most distinguished men of his time, was the husband of the illustrious Proba Falconia, surnamed Anicia. [Vide Anicia]

ANICIUS OLYBRIUS, Sextus, and Sextus Anicius Probus, sons of the preceding, were consuls together in 395. They were great patrons of learning. Claudian. de Consul. Olib. & Prob.

ANICIUS BASSUS, Sextus, a consul in 408 and 431, brought an accusation of incontinence against the pope Sixtus III, who consented to be tried by a council, and being, after a strict investigation, found innocent, his accuser was punished by the emperor with the confiscation of his goods. Anastas. in Sixt. III; Baron. Annal. ann. 483.

ANICIUS, was also the name of several other consuls.

ANIENSIS, Tribus (Geog.) a Roman tribe, consisting of the inhabitants near the river Anis, who were added by the censors to the rest, U. C. 455, A. C. 299.

ANILEUS (Hist.) a Jew of humble birth, who, with his brother Aineus, made himself very formidable to the neighbouring states, until he was killed in the night by the Babylonians, in the reign of Caligula, A. D. 40. Joseph. Antiq. l. 8, c. 12.

ANIM (Bibl.) אַנִּי, a city of Judah. Josh. xv. 50.

ANJOU, Duke of (Hist.) who at his confirmation assumed the name of Francis, was the fourth surviving son of Henry II. He was successively duke of Alençon, Brabant, and Anjou, under which latter title he aspired to the hand of queen Elizabeth, and was for a time favourably received.

ANJOU (Geog.) a province of France, which was first inhabited by the Andes or Andegavi, and forms now the department of the Maine and the Loire.

Extent. It is 80 leagues in length and 20 in breadth.

Rivers. It is watered by a number of rivers, the principal of which are the Loire, the Sarthe, the Vienne, the Mayenne, the Foucy, &c.

Towns. Its capital is Angers, besides which there are Montreuil-Bellai, Saumur, Chateau, Gontier, Fleche, Candé, Ingrande, &c.

History. Anjou was a favourite province of the Romans, who have left many vestiges of their residence in that part of France. It was afterwards subject to the kings of France, from whom it was taken by the English in the 11th century, and retaken in 1203 by Philip of France. It was subsequently converted into a county by Charles the Bald, in favour of Tertulle, or Tercule, a Breton, from whom the ancient counts derived their origin. One of his descendants, Foulquez, was king of Jerusalem; and Geoffrey V, count of Anjou, surnamed Plantagenet, was the father of Henry II, king of England, who was also count of Anjou. At his death the county of Anjou reverted to the crown, being forfeited to king John, who converted it into a duchy in favour of his second son Louis, afterwards king of Naples and Sicily. But it again reverted to the crown in 1480, at the death of Charles IV, king of Naples and Sicily, since which time it has been a royal title, mostly conferred on the second son.

ANIRAN (Myth.) an angel or genius among the Persians, who presides over weddings, and takes cognizance of every thing that happens on the 30th day of every month, according to the notions of the magi; on which account this day, which bears the name of Aniram, is kept with much solemnity as a festival.

ANIS (Geog.) a notable river of Italy, now Teverone, which has its source in mount Trebiani, and runs through the Tiburinum Agrum. It is called præceps by Horace, probably from the force of its stream.

Hor. l. 1, od. 7, v. 13.

Et præceps Anio, et Tyburni lucus, et uida Molibus pomaria rivis.

Gelidus, by Virgil. Virg. Æn. l. 7, v. 683.

— Gelidumque Anienem et roseida rivis, Hermæ saxa columi.

Pomifer, by Propertius. Propert. l. 4, el. 7, v. 86.

Ranque Anio qua pomifer incubit arvis.

It is supposed to derive its name from Anius, a king of the Etrusci, who drowned himself there out of grief for the loss of his daughter, who was carried away. The epithet derived from the name of this river is Anienus, as the Aniena fluenta of Virgil; the Aniena unda of Propertius; the Aniena frigora of Statius; also Anienus the god of the Anio. Dionys. Hal. l. 6; Cic. pro Cornel. c. 1; Liv. l. 2, c. 32; Plin. l. 3, c. 12; Strab. l. 5; Plut. de Fort. Rom.; Priscian. de Art. Grammat. l. 6.

ANISTIUS (Hist.) a Lacedæmonian, courier to Alexander the Great, made a journey on foot, according to Solinus, from Sicyon to Elis, which is 3200 stadia, or 150 miles.

ANISUS (Geog.) the Latin name for the river Ena.

ANITORGIS (Geog.) a town of Hispania Tarraconensis, near which a battle was fought between Asdrubal and Scipio. Liv. l. 25, c. 33.

ANIUS (Myth.) Ἄνιος, a son of Rhœa, by Apollo, was a king of Delos. He had three daughters who were afterwards changed into doves. Dionys. Hal. l. 1; Diod. l. 5; Ovid. Met. l. 13; Tzetz. in Lycoph.

ANIUS (Hist.) a king of the Etrusci. [Vide Anio]

ANKERSTROM, John James (Hist.) a Swedish officer, was convicted of holding a treasonable correspondence with the Russians during the Swedish war, and received the pardon of the king Gustavus: after which he assassinated his benefactor at a masked ball, and in 1792 suffered for his offence, in the same year, by losing his head and his right hand.

ANNA (Bibl.) daughter of Phanuel, a prophetess, and widow of the tribe of Asher, was distinguished for her piety and faith which she displayed at the time that the Holy Virgin went to present Jesus in the temple. Luke ii. 36.

ANNA (Myth.) a goddess of the Romans, who was supposed by some to be the sister of Dido, by others to be put for the moon. She had the epithet of perenna, from her being supposed to remain constantly under the waters. Ovid. Fast. l. 3, v. 653.

— *Placidi sum nympha Numici,
Anne perenne latens Anna Perenna vocur.*

ANNA, the daughter of Belus, and sister of Dido, is said to have fled towards Carthage on the death of the latter, and to have been thrown on the coast of Italy, where she was well received. Those who make her to be the goddess above-mentioned, maintain that she leaped into the river Numicus to escape from Lavinia, the wife of Æneas, who was jealous of her.

ANNA (Hist.) or Hannah, חַנָּה, was the wife of Tobit, of the tribe of Naphthali, who was carried away captive to Nineveh by Salmaneser. She supported her blind husband and family by spinning. Tob. i. 1, 2, &c.

ANNA, wife of Joachim, and mother of the Blessed Virgin, whose names do not occur in Scripture, but have been handed down by the Christians of the East. Their authority is however not to be relied on.

ANNA, vide Anne.

ANNA, Comnena, daughter of the emperor Alexis Comnenus, wrote the history of her father's reign, under the title of the 'Alexiad,' or, the Life of the Emperor Alexis Comnenus, which is to be found in the fourth volume of the 'Corpus Byzantarum Historiarum,' fol. Paris. 1651.

ANNA, Ivanowna, daughter of John Alexiowitz, czarine of Russia, was born in 1693, succeeded Peter Alexiowitz II, in 1711, and died in 1740. At the death of her husband Frederic William, duke of Courland, she took one Biron, a person of low birth into favour, which he abused very greatly, to the injury of her subjects.

ANNÆI (Hist.) a family originally of Cordova, which settled at Rome in the time of the emperors, and produced some distinguished persons, as Annaeus Seneca, Lucan, Mella, and Sereus. [Vide Seneca, &c.]

ANNEBAUT, Claude d' (Hist.) of an ancient family in Normandy, was taken prisoner with Francis I, at Pavia. He was afterwards marshal and admiral of France, and died in 1552.

ANNEBAUT, John d', son of the preceding, was also engaged in active service, and died of the wound he received at the battle of Dreux, in 1562.

ANNEBAUT, James d' (Ecc.) brother of Claude above-mentioned, was made cardinal by Paul III in 1544, and died in 1558.

ANNEIX, de Souvenel Alexis Francis (Biog.) an advocate of the parliament of Britany, is known as the author of an epistle in verse to the shade of Boileau. He died at Rennes in 1758, aged 69.

ANNESLEY, Ranulph or Ralph d' (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, siding with the rebellious barons in the reign of king John, forfeited his estate, but had it restored to him in the subsequent reign in 1216, and died in 1218.

ANNESLEY, Robert, father of the first viscount Valentia, was a commander at sea in Elizabeth's time, and also a captain in her army, which was raised to suppress the earl of Desmond's rebellion, after which he became an undertaker in the plantation of Ulster.

ANNESLEY, Sir Francis, first viscount Valentia. [Vide Valentia]

ANNESLEY, Sir Arthur, second viscount Valentia, and first earl of Anglesey. [Vide Anglesey]

ANNESLEY, James, son of the first earl of Anglesey, being deserted by his father, was, at the death of the latter, kidnapped and sent to America through the instrumentality of his uncle Richard, who usurped the title. He returned after an absence of 13 years, and succeeded in making good his claim to the estates ; but died in 1760 without issue, before he could come into possession.

ANNESLEY (Her.) the name of an ancient English family, derived from the lordship of Annesley, in Nottinghamshire, which was in their possession at or before the Norman conquest. Sir Francis Annesley, before-mentioned under History, was created a baronet of Ireland in 1620, being the second raised to that dignity ; in 1621 he was created viscount Valentia, in reversion, to which he succeeded at the death of sir Henry Power, lord Valentia ; and in 1628 he was created baron Mountmorris, of Mountmorris. His son, the second viscount Valentia before-mentioned, was raised to the English peerage in 1661, by the titles of baron Annesley, of Newport Pagnell, and earl of Anglesey ; and Altham, the second son of this latter, was raised to the Irish peerage by the title of lord Altham, to whose descendant, Richard, fifth Lord Altham, devolved the honours of the elder branch at the death of Arthur, the fifth earl of Anglesey. But at the death of this Richard, sixth earl of Anglesey, the English honours were dropped in consequence of the claims of sir Arthur Annesley, his son, being deemed invalid by the English House of Lords, although by the decision of the Irish House, he succeeded to the Irish titles, and in 1793 he was created earl of Mountnorris. [Vide Mountnorris]

ANNESLEY, Earl of, one of the titles at present enjoyed by a branch of the above-mentioned family; descended from Francis, the eldest son of the second marriage of the first viscount Valentia, whose sixth son William Francis Annesley was advanced to the Irish peerage in 1758, by the title of baron Annesley, of Castle Wellan, and created viscount Glerawley, Co. Fermanagh, in 1766. His eldest son was further advanced to the dignity of earl of Annesley in 1789. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

ANNIANUS (Biog.) a poet in the age of Trajan. Aul. Gell. l. 7, c. 7.

ANNIBAL (Hist.) Ἀννίβας, or Hannibal, son of Gisco, and grandson of that Amilcar who was killed by Gelo; was sent by the Carthaginians to the assistance of Ægistha, and was beaten by Hierocrates, the Syracusan. Justin calls him the son of Andrubal, but in this he differs from all other historians. Xenoph. Hellen. l. 1, c. 1; Diodor. l. 1, c. 3; Justin. l. 19.

ANNIBAL, a commander of the Carthaginian fleet, was beaten by the Romans under Cn. Corn. Scipio, and C. Duillius Nepos, U. C. 494, A. C. 297; and on his return to Carthage was crucified. Polyb. l. 1.

ANNIBAL, surnamed the Rhodian, undertook to enter the town of Lilybæum, notwithstanding it was besieged by the Romans, and to return again to the Carthaginians. This he effected to the admiration of all in the sight of the Romans, who, although lying with their fleet at the mouth of the harbour, were for some time unable to prevent him. At length, however, they succeeded in capturing his vessel on the repetition of these attempts. Polyb. l. 1.

ANNIBAL, a leader of the Carthaginians, against the revolvers in the war called the Lybian war, was taken prisoner, and immediately crucified by the enemy. Polyb. l. 1.

ANNIBAL, surnamed the Great, the son of Amilcar, one of the most celebrated generals of antiquity, was the most formidable enemy that Rome had ever to contend with. His hatred of the Romans is said to have been inflamed by his father at the early age of nine, when he made him swear before an altar that he would never make peace with them. Silius Italicus introduces Amilcar addressing his son. Sil. Ital. l. 1, v. 109.

Hec tua sit laus, nate, velis; age concipe bella Laturni exitum Laurentibus.

He subdued all the nations that opposed the Carthaginians, in Spain, and after crossing the Alps, which had been hitherto considered insurmountable, waged a successful war of 16 years with the Romans, during which time he signally defeated them in several engagements, and took many of their towns.

Hor. l. 1, od. 4.

*Non his juvenis orta parentibus
Infans æquor sanguine Punico
Pyrrhumque et ingentem cecidit Antiochum, Annibalem dirum.*

At length the tide of success changed against him, and being defeated by Scipio, in Africa, he was obliged to seek refuge first at the court of Antiochus, king of Syria; and afterwards at that of Prusias, king of Bithynia; but not finding any where a place of sufficient security, he poisoned himself to avoid falling into the hands of the Romans, U. C. 569, A. C. 185. According to Juvenal and others, he carried the poison in a ring.

ANTHONY, the name of several princes, &c. in modern times.

Kings of this Name.

ANTHONY, king of Navarre, father of Henry IV, left the Protestants to embrace the Catholic faith, and being engaged in the wars which raged at that time between the contending parties, he was killed in 1562.
ANTHONY, titular king of Poland, and son of Emanuel, king of Poland, was driven from his dominions by Philip II, of Spain, who took him prisoner. He afterwards made his escape, and died a fugitive in 1594.

Dukes of this Name.

ANTHONY, duke of Burgundy, and second son of Philip the Bold, was born in 1384, and was killed at the battle of Agincourt in 1415.

ANTHONY, duke of Lorraine, succeeded his father Ferri I de Lorraine in 1431, after having taken his brother-in-law René d'Anjou, the king of Naples, prisoner, who disputed his claim to the dukedom.

ANTHONY, bastard of Bourbon, surnamed the Great, son of Philip the Good, gave many testimonies of his valour, particularly against the Moors in Africa, and the Swiss in 1476. He received letters of legitimation from Charles VIII, and died at the age of 84, in 1504.

ANTHONY, duke of Lorraine and Bar, was born in 1489, signalized himself at the battles of Agnadel, Marignon, &c. and died in 1541.

ANTHONY, duke of Bourbon, natural son of Henry IV, was born in 1587, legitimated in 1608, and killed at the battle of Castelnaudary in 1632.

ANTHONY, a Sicilian, being taken prisoner by Mahomet II, at the Negropont, in 1743, set fire to the arsenal at Gallipoli, for which he was sawed in two by the Turks.

ANTHONY (Ecc.) the name of some patriarchs, &c. [Vide Antonius]

ANTHONY, St. the founder of the monastic life, was born in 251 at Coma, a village of Egypt, and died in 356, in the 19th year of the emperor Constantius. To this saint was ascribed the power of working miracles, and curing the disorder well known by the name of St. Anthony's Fire, or the Erysipelas. His Life was written by St. Athanasius, and seven letters of his are extant in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.' Gregor. Nazian. Orat. 21; S. Athanas. in Vit.; *S. Chrysostom. Tisarchus and Diocles, having formed a plot against Agathocles the Tyrant, were put to death with 600 others. Polyæn. 1. 5, c. 3.

ANTHUSA (Biog.) the wife of Secundus, and mother of S. Chrysostom, lost her husband at the age of 28, and lived the rest of her life in a state of widowhood. S. Chrysost. ep. 1.

ANTHUSA, a virgin who passed a holy life in solitude, near Constantinople. She would have suffered much from the emperor Copronymus, on account of her worshipping images, if she had not been protected by the empress Eudoxa. Baron. Annal. 755.

ANTHUSA, the daughter of Constantine Copronymus, called after the preceding virgin, retired to a monastery and disposed of all her wealth in works of charity and piety.

ANTHYLIA (Geog.) 'Ανθυλλία or 'Αντυλλία, a town not far from Alexandria in Egypt, which, according to Herodotus, supplied the queens of the country with shoes, or, according to Athenæus, with girdles. Herod. 1. 2, c. 98; Athen. 1. 1, c. 25.

ANTIA, gens (Numis.) a plebeian family of Rome, of which some medals are extant, bearing the inscription on the obverse, sometimes RESTIO, the surname of this family, and on the reverse Caius ANTIUS Caii Filius.

ANTIBES (Geog.) the ancient Antipolis, a town of Provence, in France, in the department of the Var, which was formerly a bishop's see, suffragan of Embrun; but the bishopric was afterwards transferred to Grasse. The illustrious house of Grimaldi possessed the temporal domain, which was purchased by Henry the Great. It is situated on the Mediterranean, 11 m. S.S.W. Nice, lon. 7° 7' E., lat. 43° 45' N.

ANTICLEA (Myth.) 'Αντίκλεια, a daughter of Autolycus and Amphithea, was the wife of Laertes, and the mother of Ulysses, by Sisyphus, as is said, previous to her marriage with the former. Olyss. 1. 11; Hygin. fab. 201; Paus. 1. 10, c. 29; Iactant. in Stat. Achil. 1. 3, v. 76.

ANTICLES (Hist.) 'Αντίκλης, an Athenian commander, sent with a fleet against the Athenians. Thucyd. 1. 1, c. 117.

ANTICLES, an Athenian archon in the 103d Olympiad.

ANTICLES, one of Alexander's officers, who joined in the conspiracy of Hermolaus. Q. Curt. 1. 8, c. 6.

ANTICLIDES (Biog.) 'Αντικλίδης, a Greek historian, quoted by the Scholiast in Apollonius, and also by other writers. Strab. 1. 5; Plut. in Aler.; Athen. 1. 4, &c.

ANTICRATES (Hist.) 'Αντικράτης, a Spartan general, who stabbed Epaminondas at the battle of Mantinea. Plut. in Agesil.

ANTICYRA (Geog.) 'Αντίκυρα or 'Αντίκυρα, now Suola, an island in the Meliæan Bay, opposite to mount Æta. It was famous for the growth of hellebore, which was said to be good for insanity, whence the proverb Naviget Anticyram, as applied to madmen or unreasonable people. Hor. 1. 2, sat. 3, v. 165.

— Verum ambitus et audax

Naviget Anticyram.

Ovid. Pont. 1. 4, ep. 3, v. 53.

*I hibe, dixissem, purgantes pectora succos,
Quicquid et in tota nascitur Anticyrà.*

Per. Sat. 4, v. 16.

— Anticyra melior sorbere meracas.

There was an island in Phocis which bore the same name, and is also said to have abounded in hellebore. Strab. 1. 9; Liv. 1. 26, c. 26; Mela 1. 2, c. 23; Plin. 1. 25, c. 5; Suet. in Calig. c. 29; Paus. 1. 10, c. 36.

ANTIDAMUS (Biog.) a Greek historian. Voss. de Hist. Græc. 1. 3.

ANTIDORUS (Hist.) 'Αντίδωρος, a Lemnian, who passed over from the army of Xerxes to the side of the Athenians just before the battle of Salamis. Herod. l. 7, c. 11.

ANTIDOTUS (Biog.) a painter, of whom Pliny speaks in high terms of commendation. Plin. l. 35, c. 11.

ANTIGENES (Hist.) Ἀντιγένης, the father of Socrates, who was one of the commanders of the Athenian fleet, sent to the court of Peloponnesus. Thucyd. l. 2, c. 24.

ANTIGENES, an officer in Alexander's army who obtained the command of a thousand men, but proving faithless in his commission was burnt alive for his treachery, in the 116th Olympiad, A. C. 315. Quint. Curt. l. 5, c. 10.

ANTIGENES, a shepherd spoken of by Virgil. Virg. Eclog. 5.

ANTIGENIDAS (Biog.) a celebrated Theban player on the flute, who was remarkable for the effeminacy of his dress.

ANTIGONE (Myth.) Ἀντιγόνη, the daughter of Œdipus, by his mother Jocasta, who led about her blind father. She was condemned by Creon to be buried alive for having secretly interred her brother, but killed herself previous to the execution of the sentence.

Ovid. Trist. l. 3, cl. 3.

— Frutrem Thebana peremptum
Supposuit tumulo, rage rotante, soror.

Hæmon, the son of Creon, being in love with Antigone, killed himself when he found that her death was determined on. Sophocles has chosen Antigone for the fable of one of his best tragedies, which was represented at Athens 30 times without interruption. Sophocles in Antigone; Apollod. l. 3, c. 5; Hygin. fab. 67; Senec. in Œdip.; Stat. in Theb. l. 2, v. 350; Philost. l. 2, c. 29.

ANTIGONE, a daughter of Laomedon, and sister of Priam, was said to have been changed into a stork for comparing herself with Juno. Ovid. Met. l. 6.

ANTIGONE (Hist.) daughter of Berenice, was wife to king Pyrrhus. Plut. in Pyrrh.

ANTIGONIA (Geog.) or Antigonea, Ἀντιγονία, the name of several places, as 1. A town of Epirus, near the Acroceraunian mountains supposed by some to be the present Argiro Castro, by others Croza. Plin. l. 4, c. 1. 2. A town of Macedonia, now Cocogna, or, according to others, Antigoea. Plin. l. 4, c. 10. 3. A town of Assyria, Arcudia, Troas, &c.

ANTIGONIA (Numis.) medals of Antigonis, in Epirus, are distinguished by an obelisk within a crown of ivy leaves and bunches of grapes, as in fig. 1, and a medal of Antigonis, in Macedonia, is known by the inscription ANTIFONEON, within a Macedonian shield, as in fig. 2. Goltz. Græc. fab. 3 and 23.

ANTIGONUS (Hist.) Ἀντιγόνοϛ, a name common to several princes.

ANTIGONUS, one of Alexander's generals, who at his death obtained Pamphylia, Lycia, and Phrygia, for his share of the succession. He died after a successful reign in the 115th Olympiad, A. C. 301. Diodor. l. 17, &c.; Strab. l. 13; C. Nepos. in Eumen.; Plut. in Demet.; Justin. l. 13; Paus. l. 1, c. 6; Euseb. Chron.; Uss. Annal.

ANTIGONUS, surnamed Gonatas, son of Demetrius, and grandson of the preceding, was king of Macedonia, and died after a reign of 12 years, in the 125th Olympiad, A. C. 278. Polyb. l. 9; Plut. in Demet.; Justin. l. 21; Paus. l. 1; Eusebius, &c.

ANTIGONUS, surnamed Δῶσον, i. e. Doson, or one about to give, from his promising much and giving nothing, was guardian to his nephew Philip, the son of Demetrius. He usurped the throne of Macedonia, but dying after a reign of eleven years, left it to Philip the lawful successor. Polyb. l. 2; Plut. in Cleom.; Justin. l. 8; Pausanias, Eusebius, &c.

ANTIGONUS, the son of Hyrcanus, and brother of Aristobulus, shared the kingdom of Judæa with the latter, but was afterwards killed by his order on suspicion that he was conspiring against his life. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13, &c.

ANTIGONUS, son of Aristobulus II, was opposed by Hyrcanus in his pretensions to the throne of Judæa, and being at length taken prisoner by Herod, he was put to death by M. Antony, A. D. 37. He was the last of the race of the Amoneans, who had held the throne of Judæa for 123 years. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14, c. 15, &c.; Plut. et Dion. in Anton. &c.

ANTIGONUS, Sochams, a president of the Jewish Sanhedrim, whose son Sadoc was the founder of the sect of the Sadducees.

ANTIGONUS, an historian and philosopher of Chyrsus, who wrote the lives of some ancient philosophers, and many other things, of which his Θαυμάσια, or Account of Wonders, is still extant, and was edited by Meursius in 1619. Diogen. Laert., Athen., &c.

ANTIGONUS, the name of several other writers mentioned by Diogenes Laertes, Plutarch, and Stephanus.

ANTIGONUS, a statuary, spoken of by Pliny. Plin. l. 34, c. 8.

ANTIGONUS (Numis.) a medal bearing the effigy of one king of Macedonia of this name, as in fig. 1, is ascribed by some to the first Antigonis, and by others to the second. The inscription ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ANTIGONOI, sufficiently showing that it belongs to one or the other. Goltzius has, however, given two medals of Antigonis Gonatus, bearing on the obverse, as in fig. 2, a head of this prince, and the inscription on the reverse, ΒΑΣΙΛΕΥΣ ANTIGONOI TONATOI.

ANTIGONUS, the king of Judæa, is represented on a medal of Socius, the general of Mark Anthony, with his hands bound behind him, and looking at a trophy. Goltz. Græc. Fab. 38; Spanh. Præstant. &c. vol. i. p. 385; Morel. Fam.; Beg. Thes. Brand. vol. i. p. 247.

ANTIGUA, Maria de la (Biog.) a Spanish nun of the 17th century, who died in 1617, leaving several treatises on religious subjects.

ANTILEON (Hist.) Ἀντιλέων, a tyrant of Chalcis, at whose death the government became an oligarchy. Aristot. Polit. l. 5, c. 1.

ANTILEON (Biog.) a Greek historian, who wrote on chronology. Diogen. l. 3, c. 3.

ANTILEON, another historian mentioned by Pollux; whether the same as the preceding or not is uncertain.

ANTILOCHUS (Myth.) Ἀντιλόχοϛ, a son of Nestor, who distinguished himself at the Trojan war. He was slain by Memnon, according to Hector. Hom. Odys. l. 4, v. 187; Pind. Pyth. Od. 6; Xenoph. Cynoget.; Apollod. l. 1; Hygin. fab. 252; Ovid. in Epist. Penelop. v. 11.

ANTILOCHUS (Biog.) a poet, who wrote among other things a panegyric on Lysias. Plut. in Lys.

ANTILOCHUS, an historian, commended by Dionysius Halicarnassus, and others. Dionys. Halic. Judic.; Clem. Alex. and. Strom.; Voss. Græc. Hist. l. 3.

ANTIMACHUS (Myth.) Ἀντιμαχοϛ, a Trojan, bribed by Paris to oppose the restoration of Helen. Hom. Il. l. 11, v. 123.

ANT

ANTIMACHUS (Biog.) a poet of Colophon, or Claros, a cotemporary with Socrates and Plato in the 93d Olympiad, A. C. 408. He wrote among other things on the war of Thebes, and was by some compared to Homer.
Propert. l. 2, el. 34.

Tu non Antimacho, non tutior his Homero.

But Catullus gives him the epithet of timidus.
Catul. Carm. 92.

At populus timido gaudeat Antimacho.

A fragment of Antimachus is preserved in Brunck's Analecta, entitled, 'Antimachi Colophonii Reliquiae,' &c. Plut. in Lysand. et Timol.; Quint. l. 10, c. 10; Paus. l. 9, c. 35; Gyrald. de Poet. Hist. l. 3; Voss. de Poet. Græc.

ANTIMACHUS, the name of two other poets, one of whom was a musician; also of a sculptor, mentioned by Pliny.

ANTIMACHUS, or Antimaco, Mark Antony, a celebrated Greek professor in Italy, was born in 1473, and died in 1552. He translated Gemistus Plethon, and part of Dionysius Halicarnassus; and wrote also several Latin and Greek poems, or epigrams, the latter of which are addressed to Vettori, and published in 1758.

ANTIMENIDAS (Hist.) 'Αντιμενίδας, one of the Lacedæmonians, who was sent on a mission to Athens respecting the restoration of some captives. Thucyd. l. 5, c. 42.

ANTIMENIDES (Hist.) 'Αντιμενίδης, a leader of the Mitylenean exiles, who went with the poet Alcæus against the tyrant Pittacus. Aristot. Polit. l. 3, c. 14; Strab. l. 13.

ANTIMNESTUS (Hist.) 'Αντιμνήστος, the father of Hierophon, an Athenian commander. Thucyd. l. 5, c. 105.

ANTIN (Geog.) a town of Gascony, which first gave the title of marquis, and afterwards, in 1611, that of duke to the family of Goudrin.

ANTIN, Francis d' (Biog.) a Benedictine, was born in 1688, and died in 1740, leaving a new edition of Du Cange's Dictionary, very much enlarged.

ANTINOE (Geog.) or Antinopolis, a town in upper Egypt, built by Adrian, on the spot where his favourite Antinous was drowned. It was originally a bishop's see, but is now in ruins. Dion. l. 69; Hist. Tripart. l. 8, c. 1.

ANTINOUS (Myth.) 'Αντίνοος, a native of Ithaca, and one of Penelope's suitors, who struck Ulysses when he offered himself in the dress of a beggar, and was afterwards among the first that was sacrificed to the anger of the hero. Ulyss. Od. l. 1; Propert. l. 2, el. 5.

ANTINOUS (Hist.) a youth of Bithynia, of whom the emperor Adrian was enamoured. He deified him after his death, and gave it out that he was placed among the constellations.

ANTINOUS (Numis.) medals were struck in honour of this favourite of Adrian, by the Bithynians, Achæans, Ægyptians, Chalcedonians, Smyræni, Hieropolitani, Tarsenses, Cyziceni, Ancyрани, &c. who worshipped him under the figures of Apollo, Bacchus, Mercury, or under those of animals dedicated to these gods, as the bull sacred to Apollo, the ram for Mercury, the panther for Bacchus, &c., which were given on the reverse, his effigy being represented on the obverse, as in the annexed cut, inscription ΗΡΩΟC ANTINOY. Vallant. Num. Imper.; Patin. Numis. Imper. Rom.; Spanh. Præstant., &c.; Mediobarb. Numis. Imprut., &c.

ANTIO (Geog.) vide Antium.

ANTIOCH (Bibl.) 'Αντιόχεια, the town in Syria, described under Geography, is the one mentioned in Scripture, which, according to St. Jerome, was formerly called Riblah, Acts xi. S. Hieron, in Ezek. xlvii. Also Antioch, of Pisidia, is specified as distinct from the former Antioch, whither St. Paul went to preach the Gospel. Acts xiii. 14.

ANT

ANTIOCH (Geog.) a famous ancient town of Syria, [vide Antiochia] which by the Turks is called Antaki. It is situated on the south bank of the river Orontes, in Soune, a province of Asiatic Turkey, 67 m. W. Aleppo, lon. 35° 17' E., lat. 36° 6' N. Nothing remains of its ancient splendour but ruins.

History of Antioch.

Antioch, in the Latin Antiochia, [vide Antiochia] Greek 'Αντιόχεια, had the appellation of Τετραπόλις, because it was divided into four parts, which were reckoned so many distinct cities. It was, according to Ammianus, not surpassed by any other city in his time in wealth and grandeur, although it had suffered severely from earthquakes at different times, both before and after the Christian æra. It was almost entirely ruined by two shocks, which it experienced in 526 and 528, whence, after being repaired by the emperor Justinian, it was called Theopolis, according to Evagrius. In 548 it was taken and burnt by Chosroes, king of Persia, and again in 574, after having been rebuilt by Justinian, it was taken, and its walls destroyed by the same Chosroes. In 637 it was taken with the rest of Syria by the Saracens, and retaken by Nicephorus Phocas in 966, but it fell into the hands of the Saracens again in 970. It was however recovered during the crusades in 1097, when it was governed by Bæmond, and his successors of the same name, until the time of Bæmond VIII, who died without issue, after which, in 1268, it finally fell into the hands of the Saracens, and sunk into insignificance.

Church of Antioch.

At Antioch, about the year A. D. 43, the disciples of Christ were first called Christians, as we learn from the Acts of the Apostles, v. 26; and here St. Peter is supposed to have established in 38, a patriarchal see, after which the bishops who held that see had the title of patriarchs of the East. The following is the order of their succession:

ANTIOCHIA (Geog.) Ἀντιόχεια, the name of very many towns among the ancients, of which the following only are worthy of notice.

ANTIOCHIA, the celebrated city of Syria, which has been treated at large under the more familiar name of Antioch. This town, which is known to the Turks at present by the name of Antackia, was built in the 119th Olympiad, A. C. 301, by Seleucus, surnamed Nicanor; by whom it was called after his father Antiochus the Great, as is generally supposed. A harbour was constructed here by the order of Tiberius, which was repaired at different times, and the town beautified by the succeeding emperors, Nero, Vespasian, and Titus, who bestowed great privileges on the inhabitants. They fell under the displeasure of Adrian, who deprived them in part of the distinction which they held among the cities of Asia, and in the reign of Theodosius they were threatened with the vengeance of the emperor for having, in a popular tumult, thrown down the statues of the empress Flacilla, but the punishment was averted by the interference of the patriarch Flavianus. A further account of this place may be found under the head of Antioch, and also under Numismatics. Cic. pro Arch. c. 3; Strab. l. 16; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. l. 5; Procop. Edific. l. 2, c. 10; Spartian in Vit. Hadrian; Ammian. Marcellin. l. 4, &c.

ANTIOCHIA, a town of Caria, now Sachiali, near the Mæander, now called the Madre, and in the modern province of Natolia.

ANTIOCHIA, a town of Pisidia, now Tuchia or Versagelli, situated on a hill not far from the Mæander, was made a Roman colony by Augustus, and received the additional name of Cæsarea. Strab. l. 12; Plin. l. 5; Ptol. l. 5.

ANTIOCHIA, a town of Cælosyria, at the foot of Mount Hippius, which, according to Stephanus, was built by Semiramis, and was otherwise called Gadara. Steph. Byz.

ANTIOCHIA (Numis.) medals were struck by several towns of this name, which are sufficiently distinguished from each other.

ANTIOCHIA, the capital of Syria, struck medals as an independent state, and also in honour of Augustus, Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, Adrian, Ælius, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Lucilla, Commodus, Pescennius, Severus, Caracalla, Macrinus, Philippus, Otacilla, Trajanus, Decius, &c. Its earliest medals bear the inscription, Ἀντιόχειαν Μητροπόλιν; ANTIO. Τῆς ΜΗΤ, i. e. Antiochenorum Metropolis; to which are added their first epocha, dated from the building of their city, ΕΤ vel ΕΤΟΥΣ ΒΜ, ΕΙΡ, ΖΟΡ, &c. i. e. Anno 42, 115, 177, &c. After receiving from Pompey the privilege of Autonomia, or of living under their own laws, their medals were inscribed ΑΝΤΙΟΧΕΩΝ ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩΣ ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΥ, and marked with an epocha dated from that event, as Δ on some, Η on others; ΙΙ, ΟΙ, ΕΚ, and lastly on others with ΑΑ, which, added to U. C. 691, the commencement of the Pompeian æra, makes U. C. 722, the year preceding the battle of Actium. These medals are moreover distinguished by the type of the head of Jupiter on the obverse, without inscription; and on the reverse, Jupiter himself sitting and holding a figure of victory, &c. Sometimes the titles ΙΕΡΑΣ, and ΑΣΥΛΟΥ were added, as ANTIOXEON. THE ΜΗΤΡΟΠΟΛΕΩΣ ΤΗΣ ΙΕΡΑΣ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΥΛΟΥ. A third epocha is marked on the medals of Augustus dated from the battle of Actium, which in some cases are distinguished by the addition of ΕΤΟΥΣ ΝΙΚΗΣ, i. e. Anno Victoriæ. This epocha is supposed to have continued in use until the reign of Tiberius, in honour of whom the Julian epocha was adopted, dated from U. C. 705, when Julius Cæsar having entered on his dictatorship, restored to the inhabitants of Antioch their freedom. The letters ΔΕ SC, i. e. Δημοκρατικῆς Ἐξουσίας, Tribunicia potestate Senatus Consulto, are frequently to be met with on medals or coins of this Antioch, from the time that Carnacalla planted a colony there, and granted to the inhabitants the liberty of coining. Vaill. Num. Gr.; Spanh. vol. i. p. 664; Hunt. Num. Urb. et Pop. &c.

ANTIOCHIA, the town of Coelestria, struck medals of M. Aurelius, L. Verus, and Commodus, and marked an epocha on them, dated from the period of their liberation by Pompey from their subjection to the Jews; they also bore the titles of Sacra, asylum or inviolata, Autonomus or libera, as ANTIOX ΗΡΟΣ ΗΠΕΡ ΙΕΡΑ ΑΣΥΛΟΝ ΑΥΤΟΝΟΜΟΝ ΕΜΗ, Antiochia ad Hippum sacra inviolata suis legibus utens anno 248, on a medal of Commodus.

ANTIOCHIA, the town of Caria, is known by the inscription, ANTIOXEON MEANΔPOC, Antiochensium Meander, on a medal of Trajanus Decius. Several other medals are ascribed to this town, of Augustus, Claudius, Domitian, Antoninus, M. Aurelius, Commodus, Diadumenianus, Gordianus Pius, Philippus, sen., Otacilia, &c.; particularly some of Augustus, bearing the title of Synarchia, as ΑΤΤΑΛΟΥ ΣΥΝΑΡΧΙΑ, Attali Synarchia vel consortium imperii; also one of Commodus, inscription, ANTIOXEON KAI ΛΑΟΔΙΚΕΩΝ ΟΜΟΝΟΙΑ, Antiochensium et Laodicensium Concordia. Some ancient medals struck by this town as an independent state, bear the inscription ΙΕΡΑ ΒΟΥΛΗ or ΔΗΜΟΣ. Jupiter Capitolinus was honoured on the medals of this Antioch, as appears from the inscription ΖΕΥC ΚΑΘΗΜΕΝΟΣ ANTIOXEON, together with the figure of Jupiter half naked and sitting, having a spear in his right hand, and a figure of victory in his left, on a medal of M. Aurelius.

Kings of Syria.

ANTIOCHUS I, surnamed Soter, the son of Seleucus, died after a reign of 19 years in the 129th Olympiad, A. C. 261. The effigies of this and the following princes are given on medals as in the annexed figures. [Vide Antiochus under Numismatics] Polyb. l. 4; Val. Maxim. l. 5; Justin. l. 17, c. 2; Appian. in Syriac.

ANTIOCHUS II, surnamed Theos, succeeded his father Antiochus, and was poisoned by his queen Laodicea after a reign of 15 years in the 133d Olympiad, A. C. 246. Appian. in Syriac.; Euseb. Chron.; Sulpit. Sever. l. 2; Hieron. in Dan. xi. 6.

ANTIOCHUS III, surnamed the Great, son of Seleucus Cullinicus, succeeded his brother Seleucus Ceraunius, and died after a long and glorious reign of 37 years in the 148th Olympiad, A. C. 187. He it was who gave an asylum to Amabel. Cic. de Orat. l. 2, c. 18; Liv. l. 34, c. 59; Strab. l. 16; Justin. l. 31; Flor. l. 2, c. 1; Euseb. in Chron.

ANTIOCHUS IV, surnamed Epiphanes, i. e. illustrious, succeeded his father Antiochus III, and died after a reign of 11 years in the 154th Olympiad, A. C. 164. He it was who profaned the temple of Jerusalem. 1 Maccab. xiii.; Polyb. l. 3; Joseph. Antiq. l. 12; Appian. de Bell. Syriac.

ANTIOCHUS V, surnamed Eupator, succeeded his father Antiochus in the 154th Olympiad, A. C. 164, and was killed by Demetrius, his uncle, after a reign of two years. 2 & 3 Maccab. Joseph. Antiq. Jud. l. 12, &c.; Justin. l. 34.

ANTIOCHUS VI, surnamed Theos, or God, son of Alexander Balas, was murdered by Tryphon, by whom he had been seated on the throne, after a reign of one year, in the 159th Olympiad. 2 Macc. xiii.; Joseph. Antiq. l. 13; Appian. de Bell. Syriac.

ANTIOCHUS VII, surnamed Sidetes, son of Demetrius Soter, succeeded Tryphon the Usurper, and was killed in a battle with Phraates, king of Parthia, after a reign of 11 years, in the 162d Olympiad. Joseph. l. 13; Justin. l. 38; Appian. et Oros. l. 5, c. 11.

ANTIOCHUS VIII, surnamed Gryphus, from the size and shape of his nose, was the son of Demetrius Nicanor. He succeeded his brother Seleucus, whom his mother Cleopatra had slain with an arrow; and, finding that she was preparing poison for him, he compelled her to drink it. He was assassinated by Heraclion, after a reign of 26 years, in the 170th Olympiad, A. C. 97. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13; Justin.; Appian. &c.

ANTIOCHUS IX, surnamed Cyzicenus, son of Antiochus Sidetes, was engaged with his brother, Antiochus VIII, in a war of 18 years about the succession; and, on his death, succeeded to the throne of Syria, which he occupied but one year, being killed by Seleucus VI, the son of Gryphus, in the 171st Olympiad. Josephus, Justin., &c.

ANTIOCHUS IX, surnamed Eusebes, i. e. Pious, so called in derision because he married his father's wife; succeeded his father, Antiochus IX, after expelling Seleucus, but was killed in battle after a reign of three years in the 192d Olympiad, A. C. 91. Strab. l. 11; Josephus, Justin., Eusebius, &c.

ANTIOCHUS XI, son of Antiochus Gryphus, was drowned in the Orontes, after disputing the throne with his brother Eusebes. Josephus, Appian.

ANTIOCHUS XII, surnamed Dionysius, the fifth and last son of Antiochus Gryphus, disputed the kingdom with his brother, and was killed in battle whilst fighting with the Arabians.

ANTIOCHUS XIII, surnamed Asiaticus, son of Eusebes, was named king of Syria by Lucullus, but deposed four years after. He was plundered by Verres in his passage through Sicily to Rome. Cic. in Verr. act 4, c. 27; Appian; Justin., &c.

Kings of Commagena.

ANTIOCHUS I, was the same as the preceding, who, on being deprived of his kingdom of Syria by the Romans, was left to reign over Commagena. He was afterwards summoned to Rome by Augustus, and condemned to death. Cic. ad Fam. l. 15, c. 1; Dio. l. 1, 52.

ANTIOCHUS II, the fourth king of Commagena, succeeded Mithridates II, and died in the reign of Tiberius, A. D. 17.

ANTIOCHUS III, son of the preceding, succeeded his father by the favour of Caligula, and was deposed by Vespasian, who allowed him to retire to Lacedæmon, and afterwards to live at Rome in privacy. Dion. l. 59.

ANTIOCHUS IV, surnamed Epiphanes, either the same as the preceding, or his son, assisted Titus at the siege of Jerusalem, and afterwards followed his father to Rome. [Vide Antiochus under Numismatics] Joseph. de Bell. Jud.

ANTONIUS, Cn. C., brother of the triumvir, served under Cæsar against Pompey, and was afterwards put to death by Brutus. Plut. in Brut.; Suet. in Jul. Cæs. c. 36.

ANTONIUS, Lucius, another brother of the triumvir, opposed Augustus, but being afterwards taken prisoner, obtained from the conqueror his life and liberty. Cic. Phil.; Sueton. in August. c. 34.

ANTONIUS, Julius, or Julus, son of the triumvir, was a consul with Paulus Fabius Maximus, U. C. 744, A. C. 10; and in great favour with Augustus, who gave him his niece Marcella in marriage, but being afterwards detected in an adulterous connexion with the emperor's daughter Julia, he was put to death, or, according to Paternulus, killed himself. He is supposed to have written an heroic poem on Dione in 12 books, to which Horace alludes in the second ode of the fourth book, which is dedicated to this Antonius. Vell. Paterc. l. 2; Tacit. l. 4, c. 44; Dio, l. 55.

ANTONIUS, Lucius, son of the preceding, and grandson of the triumvir, was banished by Augustus to Marseilles, where he died; and with him, as it is said, the family of the Antonii was extinct, which Tacitus denominates "Multâ claritudine sed impropere."

ANTOR (Myth.) a centaur mentioned by Valerius Flaccus. Val. Flac. l. 1.

ANTORIDES (Biog.) a painter and disciple of Aristippus. Plin. l. 35, c. 10.

ANTRECHT, John (Hist.) chancellor and master of the requests to the elector of Hesse Cassel, was born in 1544, and died in 1607. He was a learned man, and the patron of learning. Mel. Adam. in Vit. Juris.

ANTRIM, Randal Mac-Sorley, Earl of (Hist.) of the family mentioned under Heraldry, joined Tyrone for some time in his rebellion, but returning to his duty he aided the lord deputy Mountjoy in reducing the rebellious Irish to obedience, much to the satisfaction of king James I, by whom he was honoured with a place in his privy council, the appointment of lord-lieutenant of the county of Antrim, and the dignity of the peerage.

ANTRIM, Randall, Marquis of, son of the preceding, a nobleman of great spirit and activity, exerted himself in the royal cause both in Ireland and Scotland, and caused a body of 1500 men to be conveyed from the former of these two countries to the latter, under the command of colonel Alexander Macdonald, [vide Macdonald] in order to co-operate with the marquis of Montrose. He died in 1682.

ANTRIM, Alexander, third Earl of, was sworn of the privy council of James II, for which he was attainted and his estates forfeited, but being comprised within the articles of Limerick his outlawry was reversed, and he died in 1679.

ANTRIM, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles enjoyed by the family of Macdonald [vide Macdonald]; the titles, arms, &c. of which are as follow:

Titles. Macdonald, earl of Antrim, and viscount Dunluce.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st. or, a lion rampant gules for Macdonell. 2d. or, a dexter arm issuing from the sinister fess point, out of a cloud proper, holding a crozier fitchy azure, said to be assumed from one of the family assisting St. Patrick, to reduce the Irish to civility, and to propagate the Christian faith; 3d. argent, a ship with the sails furled up, sable. 4th. Party per fess azure and vert, the under part wavy, a dolphin naiant in fess argent.

Crest. On a wreath, a dexter arm couped at the shoulder, attired or, turned down argent, the hand proper, holding the like crozier as in the coat.

Supporters. The dexter, a savage proper, wreathed about the temples and middle vert; the sinister a falcon proper, with beak, members, and bells or.

Motto. "Tout jour pret."

ANTRIM (Geog.) a maritime county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 46 m. long and 26 broad. It has two great natural curiosities, namely, Lough Neagh, a large lake, the waters of which are of a petrifying nature; and the Giant's Causeway, consisting of lofty pillars of Basalt. Its principal towns are Antrim, Belfast, Carrickfergus, and Lisburn. Its rivers are the Bush, Rewel, Braid, Crumlin, &c.

ANTRO, Coracius (Hist.) vide Coracius.

ANTROBUS (Her.) the name of a family which held the seat of Antrobus Hall, in the county of Chester, from an early period previous to the reign of Henry VI, when it was alienated by Henry Antrobus, esq. but re-purchased in 1808, by sir Edward Antrobus, who in 1815 was created a baronet. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Lozengey or and azure, on a pale gules, three stars of six points, waved of the first.

Crest. On a wreath of the colours, issuing out of rays proper, an unicorn's head couped argent, horned and maned or, gorged with a wreath of laurel vert.

Supporters. Two horses proper, being the supporters used and borne by the lords Rutherford, co. Roxburgh, which (the title having become extinct in 1730) have been granted to sir Edward Antrobus, who purchased the barony and estate of Rutherford.

ANTRUM, Sibyllæ (Geog.) a celebrated place in Campania, which was said to be inhabited by the Sibyl, now Grotta della Sibilla. Vib. Sequest.

ANTWERP (Geog.) a city of Brabant, called by the Latin authors Antverpia or Andoverpum; by the Germans, Antorf; by the Spanish, Anvers; and by the French, Anvers. It is a very ancient place, which has been supposed by some to have existed before the time of Cæsar. It was much enlarged by John I, duke of Brabant, in 1201; by John III, in 1314; and by the emperor Charles V, in 1543; but it suffered much during the civil wars about religion, particularly from the duke of Alva and the Spaniards, by whom not less than 600 houses were burnt, and 10,000 of the inhabitants killed or drowned. It was retaken and repaired by the prince of Parma in 1585. It has since that time been repeatedly taken. Antwerp has been the birth-place of many learned men; as Ortelius, Gorleus, Andrew Schottus, Nonius, &c. Its first bishop, Sonnius, called a council of his clergy in 1576; and John Miræus, also a bishop of Antwerp, assembled a council in 1610. This town is situated on the Scheldt, 22 m. N. Brussels, and 65 S. Amsterdam. Lon. 4° 23' E. lat. 51° 13' N.

AORSI (Geog.) a people of Sarmatia, inhabiting the country now called Servia.

AOSTA (Geog.) or Aousta, in the Latin Augusta Prætoria; an ancient town of Piedmont, at the foot of the Alps, which contains many monuments of the Romans. It is a bishop's see, suffragan of Milan. The most ancient bishop mentioned in history was Protasus, in 408, who was succeeded by Eustathius. Aosta is seated on the river Doria, 45 miles N. N. W. Turin. Lon. 7° 25' E, lat. 45° 41' N.

APACHNES (Hist.) or Pachan, third king of the dynasty of the shepherd kings of Egypt, who reigned 36 years. His reign commenced 1446, A. C.

APACZAI, John (Biog.) or Apatzaisere, a scholar of Transylvania, who, by his death in 1659, escaped the threatened punishment for his adherence to the protestant religion. He wrote, 1. 'Dissertatio Continens Introductionem ad Philosophiam Sacram,' &c. Ultraj. 1650. 2. 'Magyar Encyclopediat,' &c. i. e. an Encyclopedia in the Hungarian Language, Utrecht. 1653. 3. 'A System of Logic,' also in the Hungarian Tongue, Weissenburgh, 1636.

APAMA (Hist.) 'Αράμα, daughter of Artabazus, and wife or sister of Seleucus Nicanor, was the mother of Antiochus. From her several cities received the name of Apamea. Liv. l. 38, c. 13; Strab. l. 12.

APAMA, wife of Prusias, and mother of Nicomedes. Strab. l. 12.

APAMEA (Geog.) or Apamia, 'Αράμεια, the name of several towns, the principal of which were, 1. A town of Phrygia, near the river Marsyas, and the fountain of Mæander. It was built by Seleucus on the ruins of Celænæ, and so called after Apame his wife. It had likewise the name of Cibotos, and the gentile name was 'Αραμεικ, Apamensis, as we learn from medals. [Vide Apamea under Numismatics] Cic. ad Attic. l. 5, ep. 16; Strab. l. 12; Liv. l. 35, c. 15; Plin. l. 5, c. 29; Joseph. Antiq. l. 1, c. 4. 2. A town of Syria built also by Seleucus Nicanor, from whom it received its name, was situated near the river Axius, and had originally been called Pella; the gentile name Apamavi, Apameni, or Apamenses. It was an archbishop's see under the patriarchate of Antioch. Thomas, one of its bishops, saved it by his address from destruction at the hands of Chosroes, king of Persia. It is now called Aman or Hama, as Gusseme supposes. Cic. ad Fam. l. 22, ep. 12; Strab. l. 16; Joseph. de Bell. Jud.; Plin. l. 5, c. 23; Dio. l. 47; Sozomen. Hist. Eccles. l. 7, c. 15. 3. A town of Bithynia, near the mouth of the river Bhyndacus, which, under the name of Myrlea, was destroyed by Philip, king of Macedonia, and rebuilt by Nicomedes, the son of Prusias, who called it after his mother Apama. It was the only town of this name which was a Roman colony. The gentile name was Apamenses. Scyl. Perip.; Strab. l. 12; Plin. l. 5, c. 32; Ptol. l. 5, c. 2; Plin. l. 10, epist. 56; Zosim. l. 1, c. 35.

APAMEA (Numis.) the town of Bithynia, was the only one of this name above-mentioned, which was a Roman colony founded by Julius Cæsar, as the inscription COLONIA JULIA CONCORDIA AUGUSTA APAMEA denotes. It was entitled Concordia, because it was restored at the same time with the city of Prusias by Prusias, king of Bithynia, and called after his wife; whence they regarded themselves as sister cities. It is entitled a Metropolis on some medals, as APAMEON MITPOH. BIOYN; and also preserved a memorial of its former name Myrlea, APAMEON MYPAEON. This town struck medals of Vespasian, Julia Domna, Caracalla, Geta, Tranquillina, Trajanus Decius, Valerianus, sen., and Gallienus.

APAMEA, the town of Phrygia, mentioned under Geography, is distinguished by the epithet ad Mæandrum. APAMEIAΣ MAIANA, or ΠΡΟC ΜΑΙΑΝΑΠΟΝ; on others its situation near the two rivers is denoted APAMEON MAIANA. MAP, Apamensium Mæander Marsyas, which is further illustrated by the type on a medal of Gordianus Pius, representing, as in figure 1, Diana of Ephesus, who was worshipped at Apamea as well as at this latter city, the rivers Marsyas and Mæander under the figures of men lying down, the former having his pipe, in allusion to his contention with Apollo on that instrument; near to each of these figures is an urn pouring out water; and, lastly, the two nymphs, Naiades and Orcades, on each side Diana denote its situation between two mountains. Its ancient name Cibotos, signifying an ark, is also retained on a medal of Adrian, KIBITOC APAMEON MAPCIAC, as the ark was one of the symbols of Apamea; and a memorial of the deluge borrowed from the Scripture account, which is further illustrated, as in figure 2, by the representation of Deucalion and Pyrrha in an ark, and also before it, together with a dove on the top, and another flying towards it, having a branch in its claws. The letters ΝΑΙΕ are likewise supposed, by most authors, to stand for the name of the patriarch Noah, which was in all probability borrowed with the rest of the coincident circumstances, although some have interpreted them ΝΕΛ, for Neucororum; the remainder of the inscription ΕΠ. Μ. ΑΥΡ. ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ΑΡ. vel ΑΛΕΞΑΝΔΡΟΥ ΑΡΧΙ. APAMEON, sub Marco Aurelio Alexandro Pontifice Apamensium. This town struck medals of Tiberius, Claudius, Agrippina, Nero, Vespasian, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Commodus, Sept. Severus, Caracalla and Plautilla, Geta, Macrinus, Alexander Severus, Gordianus Pius, Philippus, sen., Ottacilia, Philippus, jun., Decius, Treb. Gallus, Valerianus, sen., bearing the names of their magistrates, and sometimes ΚΟΥΡΩΝ ΦΙΛΙΤΙΑΣ, as on one of Trebonianus Gallus.

APAMEA, the town of Syria, struck many medals as an independent state, some of which bore the inscription APAMEON THE IEPAΣ KAI AΣYΛOY. Apamensium Sacra et inviolabilis. A medal of Alexander I, king of Syria, defines the situation of this town near the river Axius. APAMEON TΩN IΠOC TΩ AΣIΩ. They first used the era of the Seleucids on their medals, which are marked ΓΞΡ, ME, CQΣ, &c. 163, 240, 293, &c.; afterwards, on receiving a confirmation of their privileges, they adopted the Augustan epocha, as on a medal of Augustus. APAMEIAΣ THE IEPAΣ K. AΣYΛ. ΓΚ. Apamæ sacra et inviolabilis, Anno 23. Another of Vespasian inscribed ΕΤΟΥΣ ΝΕΟΥ ΙΕΡΟΥ. Δ, Anni Novi Sacri 4. Their most frequent type was a figure of Victory, but sometimes a head of Jupiter, Minerva, or Bacchus.

APEL, Jahn (Biog.) or Apellus, a lawyer of Wittemberg, who, whilst canon of Wurzburg, ran away with a nun, whom he married, and afterwards assisted Luther in the reformation. He wrote, besides a defence of his marriage, 1. 'Methodica Dialectices Ratio, ad Jurisprudentiam Accommodata,' 4to. Norimberg. 1535. 2. 'Brachylogus Juris Civilis, sive Corpus Legum.' He died in 1536.

APELLAS (Biog.) or Apelles, an architect of Chios. Cic. ad Attic. l. 12, ep. 19.

APELLAS, a freedman of Fabius Gallus. Cic. ad Fam. l. 7, ep. 25.

APELLAS, a statuary mentioned by Pliny, l. 34, c. 8.

APELLAS, a geographer of Cyrene, supposed to be the same as the Apollon mentioned by Athenæus. Athen. l. 9, c. 2; S. Clem. Alexand. Protrep.; Voss. de Hist. Græc. l. 3; de Scient. Math. c. 69.

APELLES (Bibl.) a disciple whom St. Paul approved in Christ, who is supposed to have been one of the seventy-two.

Rom. xvi.

APELLAS (Hist.) an officer who was sent by king Philip to Rome, he was afterwards assassinated by Persius. Liv. l. 4, v. 42.

APRIAS (Biog.) of the island of Cos, surnamed the Prince of Painters, was so honoured by Alexander that he forbade his picture to be taken by any one else.

Hor. l. 2, epist. 1, v. 289.

Pingeret.*

His paintings of Victory, Castor and Pollux, Calumny, Clytus, &c. are celebrated in the writings of the ancients, but none so much as his two Venuses; one as she is coming out of the sea, called Anadyomene; and the other as she was sleeping, which was begun for his native island, but not finished. To the former of these pictures Ovid alludes. On. de Art. Am. l. 3, v. 401.

Si nunquam Venerem Cuius pinxisset Apelles Marsa sub aqueis illa lateret aquis.

So likewise Propertius, l. 3, cl. 9.

In Veneris tabulâ summam sibi ponit Apelles.

He wrote three volumes on Painting, which were extant in the time of Pliny. Cic. ad Fam. l. 5, ep. 12; Val. Max. l. 8, c. 11; Plin. l. 35, c. 10; Plut. in Alex.; Quintil. Inst. l. 12, c. 10; Hel. Var. Hist. l. 12, c. 34.

APELLES, a tragic actor, who was for some time in favour with Caligula, but afterwards fell under his displeasure.

APELLES, a monk, to whom was ascribed the power of working miracles. Sozom. l. 6, c. 28.

APELLES, an heresiarch, who gave rise to a sect called Apel-lites, A.D. 146. Tertull. de Præsc. c. 30; Euseb. Hist. Eccles. l. 3; S. Epiphani. Hæres. 44; S. August. Hæres. 23; Baron. ann. 146.

APELLICON (Biog.) a Peripatetic philosopher of Teios, who died in the 173d Olympiad, A.C. 80. He collected a library at Athens, which was carried to Rome by Sylla.

APENESTE (Geog.) a town of Daunian Apulia, now Vieste. Ptol. l. 3, c. 1.

APENNINES (Geog.) a branch of the Alps, called by the Latins Penninæ, or Apenninus mons [vide Apenninus]; by the Italians Apennino; by the French Apennin, extend from the Gulf of Genoa to the extremities of the kingdom of Naples, where they dwindle into mere hills.

APENNINUS (Geog.) the Apennines, a ridge of lofty mountains running from Liguria to Ariminum and Ancona. [Vide Apennines] They have been called by some Penninæ or Penninæ Alpes, from their having afforded a passage to Hannibal and his army; but they are more frequently distinguished by the name of Apenninus by the poets, as in Claudian, who describes their extent.

APHRICES (Hist.) 'Αφρίκης, an Indian prince who defended the rock Aornus with 20,000 men and elephants, but being treacherously slain, his head was carried to Alexander. Q. Curtius calls him Bryces. Diodor. l. 17; Curt. l. 8, c. 61.

APHRODISEUS, Alexander (Biog.) vide Alexander.

APHRODISIAS (Geog.) 'Αφροδισία, a town of Caria, near the Meander. It was once a bishop's see, but is now in ruins, and in the hands of the Turks, under the name of Apodisia. Jac. Annal. l. 3, c. 62; Plin. l. 5, c. 29; Ptol. l. 5, c. 2.

APHRODISIAS (Numis.) struck many medals as an independent state, bearing the inscriptions on the obverse, ΙΕΡΑ ΒΟΥΛΗ, or ΣΥΝΚΑΙΤΟC, Sacer Senatus, ΔΗΜΟC populus; and on the reverse, ΑΦΡΟΔΕΙCΙΕΩΝ. It was afterwards under the government of archons, when it struck medals of Augustus, Livia, Adrian, M. Aurelius, Crispina, Sept. Severus, Julia Pia, Caracalla, Geta, Gordianus Pius, Decius, Valerianus, sen., Gallienus, and Salonina, mostly bearing the name of their magistrates. Their most usual types

• were a figure of victory, Venus, and Diana of Ephesus, &c.

APHRODISIUM (Geog.) 'Αφροδισιον, a maritime town of Africa, now Mahometta, between Neapolis and Adrimetum. Ptol. l. 2, c. 3.

APHRODISIUS (Ecc.) an Egyptian and a disciple of St. Peter.

APHRODITE (Myth.) 'Αφροδίτη, the Grecian name for Venus, from ἀφρός, foam, because she is fabled to have sprung from the foam of the sea.

APHTHONIUS (Biog.) a sophist and a rhetorician of the third century, was the author of a book on rhetoric, in Greek, and some other things. The former is extant, and has been preserved in Aldus's Collection of Rhetoricians, and a Latin edition was printed by Elzevir, under the title of 'Aphthonii Progymnasmatia partim à Rudolpho Agricola, partim à Joanne Maria Catanaeo Latinitate Donata, cum Scholiis, R. Loricii.'

APIA (Geog.) 'Απία, the ancient name of Peloponnesus, from Apis, king of Sicyon. Hom. Il. l. 1, v. 270.

APIAN (Biog.) vide Appian.

APIAN, vide Apion.

APIAN, or Appian Peter, in German surnamed Bienewitz, an astronomer and mathematician, was born in 1495, and died in 1552. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Astronomicum Cæsareum,' fol. Ingolst. 1540. 2. 'Cosmographia,' 4to. 1529, 1575, &c. He also constructed many instruments, and made many astronomical observations.

APIAN, Philip, son of the preceding, was also distinguished as a mathematician.

APIARIUS (Ecc.) a priest of Sicca in Africa, who, rendering himself infamous by his vices, was twice condemned by the bishops of Africa in council, and twice protected by the court of Rome. Concil. V. Carthag.

APICATA (Hist.) the wife of Sejanus, by whom she was repudiated. After his fall she laid open the intrigues by which he had caused the death of Drusus. Tac. Annal. l. 4, c. 3, &c.

APICIUS (Biog.) the name of some Romans, who were all distinguished for being gluttons.

APICIUS, the first of this name mentioned by ancient writers, lived, according to Athenæus, in the time of Sylla, and procured the banishment of Rutilius the historian. Athen. l. 4, c. 19. M.

APICIUS, M. Coelius, who has been confounded with the preceding, was a distinguished glutton in the time of Augustus and Tiberius, who, after having expended the greater part of his fortune in extravagance and luxury, poisoned himself for fear that he should not have enough left for his indulgence. He is noted by the poets.

Juven. Sat. 11, v. 3.

— Quid enim majore dachinno
Excipitur vulgi, quam pauper Apicius?

Mart. l. 2, ep. 49.

Ipsæ quoque ad carnem gaudebat Apicius ire,
Quum careret, erat tristior ille domi.

He was the author of a work 'De Arte coquinaria,' of which the Amsterdam edition, 12mo. is reckoned the best, 1709. Senec. ad Helv.; Plin. l. 9, c. 17; Dio. l. 57.

APICIUS, who lived in the time of Trajan, to whom he sent fresh oysters as far as Parthia, in order to display his skill in the art of preserving them. Athen. l. 1, c. 6; Suillas in 'Ospéa.

APIDANUS (Geog.) one of the principal rivers of Thessaly, flowing into the Enipeus, according to Lucan.

Lucan. l. 6, v. 373.

Et quiquis pelago per se non cognitus omnis
Peneo domavit aquas, it gurgite raptò
Apidanus, nunquam celer, nisi mistus Enipeus.

It is called sener by Ovid. Ovid. Met. l. 1, v. 580.

Apidanus sener, lenisque Amphyræus et Æas.

Herbosus by Propertius. Propert. l. 1, eleg. 3.

Qualis in herboso concidit Apidano.

APIDIUS Merula (Hist.) a senator who was struck out of the lists of Tiberius, because he had not sworn to the acts of Augustus. Tacit. Annal. l. 4, c. 42.

APINA (Geog.) an insignificant town of Apulia, which is said to have been destroyed by Diomedes, together with Trica, whence the proverb, 'Apina et Trica,' for trifling things. Mart. l. 14, ep. 1, v. 7.

APINUS, John Lewis (Biog.) a physician of Altdorf, was born in 1668, and died in 1703, leaving among his works, 'Theses, de Syncope, Temperamento,' &c.

APIOLA (Geog.) a town of Italy, taken by Tarquin the Proud, with the stones of which he laid the first foundation of the capital. Dionys. Hal. l. 3; Plin. l. 3, c. 15.

APION (Hist.) a king of Libya, who left his kingdom by will to the Romans.

APION, or Apian (Biog.) son of Posidius, and a native of Oasis, in Egypt, was born in the reign of Augustus. He wrote against the Jews, and was refuted by Josephus. He was also one of the deputies from the city of Alexandria to the emperor Caligula against the Jews. Senec. Epist. 88; Joseph. Cont. Apion.; Plin. Pref. Hist.; Aul. Gel. l. 1, &c.

APIS (Myth.) 'Απις, a god of the Egyptians, who was worshipped under the form of an ox.

Ovid. Amat. l. 2, eleg. 13.

Et comes in pompa corniger Apis erat.

Lucan. l. 9.

Et sacer in Magni cineres nectabitur Apis.

Some have supposed him to have been Apis king of Sicyon, who is said to have passed over into Egypt; but others conceive him to answer to Osiris and Osiris, who taught the Egyptians agriculture. Herod. l. 2, &c.; Apollod. l. 1, &c.; Diodor. l. 1; Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1; Plin. c. 38; Mel. l. 1, c. 9; Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 4, &c.; Plut. de Osid. &c.; Euseb. de Præparat. Evang. c. 11; August. de Civ. Dei. l. 18, c. 5; Macrobi. Sat. l. 21, c. 2.

APIS (Numis.) this deity is frequently represented on medals in the form of a bull, and sometimes as in the annexed figure, in company with Osiris, to whom he was sacred. Osiris is here represented adorned with the lotus, having a spear in his right hand, and a sistrum in the left.

APIS, a son of Jason, was killed by the horses of Ætolus. Paus. l. 5, c. 1.

APIS (Hist.) fourth king of Argos, or Sicyon, who gave the name of Apia to the country he reigned over, according to Eusebius. Authors differ greatly in their account of this king. Æschyl. in Supplic. Act 2; Apollod. l. 2, c. 1.

APOCAUCHUS (Hist.) a Greek of mean original, and a favourite of Andronicus, who abused his power, and was cut off by his enemies in 1345. Cantacuzen, &c.

APOCAUCHUS (Biog.) a learned man of the 15th century, to whom Actuarius dedicated his works. He has been by some confounded with the preceding. Freind. Hist. Med.

APOCISIUS (Hist.) an officer under Constantius, who was sent into Gaul to treat with Sylvanus, a rebel against the emperor. He executed his commission with so much cruelty that he was afterwards burnt alive by order of Julian. A. D. 361. Ammian. Marcellin. l. 15, &c.

APOLLINARIS, Claudius (Hist.) commander of a fleet, went over from the side of Vitellius to that of Vespasian, U. C. 823, A. D. 69.

APOLLINARIS, P. Cal. a consul in the reign of Marcus Aurelius, conspired with Macrinus against the emperor Caracalla, and was killed A. D. 217.

APOLLINARIS, father and son, being suspected of entering into a conspiracy against Constantius, were put to death. Ammian. l. 14, c. 7.

APOLLINARIS, A. Claudius (Ecc.) bishop of Hierapolis in Phrygia in the second century, presented an excellent apology for the Christians to the emperor Antoninus Pius. Euseb. Hist. l. 4, c. 26; Hieron. in Catalog. c. 26.

APOLLINARIS, son of Apollinaris the Elder, a grammarian, was made bishop of Laodicea, after which he became the leader of a sect of heretics, called after him, and thus forfeited the friendship of Athanasius and all the fathers of that time with whom he was intimate. He died A. D. 380, leaving several works on the subject connected with his own heretical opinions, particularly on the persons of the Holy Trinity. S. Athanas. Epist. ad Antioch.; S. Epiphani. Hær. 77; S. August. Hær. 55; Hieron. in Catal.; Socrat. l. 2, &c.; Theodoret, &c.

APOLLINARIS, a bishop of Valentia in 480, assisted at the council of Lyons held in 515.

APOLLINARIS (Biog.) a Roman in the reign of Domitian, to whom Martial addressed one of his epigrams. Mart. l. 7, ep. 38.

APOLLINARIS, Sulpitius, a grammarian of Carthage, who followed his profession at Rome in the second century, and had Aulus Gellius and the emperor Pertinax for his scholars. Aul. Gell. l. 4, c. 17, &c.

APOLLINARIS, a poet who wrote in verse the life of the emperor Carus. Vopisc. Vit. Car.

APOLLINARIS, surnamed the Elder, in distinction from his son the heresiarch, was a grammarian at Laodicea, to whom many works are attributed that are supposed to belong to his son. Socrat. l. 2, c. 36; Sozom. l. 6, c. 15.

APOLLINIACUM (Geog.) a town of Gaul, now Polignac.

APOLLO (Myth.) Ἀπόλλων, the name of four different deities, according to Cicero, the first and principal of whom was the son of Jupiter and Latona, and brother of Diana, who is said to have been born at Delos. He was the god of all the fine arts, medicine, music, poetry, eloquence, and also archery.

Hom. Il. l. 1, v. 21.

Ἀζόμενοι Διὸς υἱὸν ἰκηβόλον Ἀπόλλωνα.

Ovid. Met. l. 1. 521.

Inventum medicina meum est, opiferque per orbem
Dicor, et heriarum subjecta potentia nobis.

Apollo is fabled to have killed the Cyclops with his arrows, for which he was expelled from heaven, and obliged to seek refuge with king Admetus. He also slew the serpent Python, and in honour of that victory instituted the Pythian games.

Ovid. Met. l. 1, v. 446.

Instituit sacros celebri certamine ludos
Pythia, de domiti serpentis nomine dicto.

To him were sacred the grasshopper, the cock, the kite, olive, laurel, &c.; and a triple power was also ascribed to him, namely, that of Sol, the sun, in heaven; of Liber, or father of Bacchus, on earth; and of Apollo, in the lower regions. The derivation of the name has been drawn from ἀπό τε ἀπολλύν, i. e. from his destroying by means of a pestilential heat.

Euripid. apud Macrobi.

Ὁ χρυσοφεγγὲς ἦλ', ὡς μ' ἀπώλεισας;
Ὅθεν σ' Ἀπόλλων ἐμφανῶς κλήσει βροτῶς.

He had statues and temples in all parts of the world; but his oracle and temple at Delphi were the most famous of all, and his colossal statue at Rhodes was one of the seven wonders of the world. He was worshipped by various names, or distinguished by various epithets, among the Greeks and Romans, as ἀργυρότοξος, and ἰκηβόλος, by Homer in particular, in allusion to his skill in archery, or his darting his rays; so likewise ἐλεξίκακος, and Παῖων, in allusion to the healing art; ἀγνιεύς, Φοῖβος, Πύθιος, Δέλφιος, ποιμνιος, &c. The manner of representing this god may be found under Numismatics. Orph. in Argon. v. 991; Apollod. l. 1, c. 3, &c.; Callim. in Apoll.; Horat. l. 1, od. 10; Hygin. Fab. 9, &c.; Lucian. Dial.; Schol. in Pind. Euripid. Aristoph. Arat. &c.; Plut. de Amor.

APOLLO (Numis.) this deity is represented under a great variety of forms, but for the most part accompanied with the bow, the bow and arrow, the arrow, or the lyre, as in fig. 1 &c.; and sometimes with the tripod and laurel, as in fig. 3; a stag, or a mechanical tool, or the serpent for the serpent Python, &c. The bow and arrow, together or apart, the lyre, the tripod and the laurel, his usual symbols, are frequently put for him without any figure. He is most commonly represented naked, as in figs. 1, 3, &c., but sometimes clothed in a female habit, as in fig. 2; his figure always youthful, and his head sometimes adorned with flowing hair, as in fig. 4; sometimes with hair tastefully disposed, and crowned with a diadem, or with rays, or with laurel; on a medal of the Milesians he is represented as in fig. 5, having his head adorned with the rays of Sol, standing in a temple which was dedicated to him, by a burning altar, and holding a stag in his hand. His posture was also very various, and most frequently standing, as in fig. 6; sometimes sitting, sometimes in the act of stretching his bow to shoot, sometimes in the act of darting his arrow, and sometimes in a chariot drawn by gryphons, &c. as in fig. 1. There was scarcely a city of Greece which struck medals that had not some representation of Apollo, besides many cities in Italy, Sicily, &c.

Fig. 3.

Fig. 4.

Fig. 6.

APOLLO (Geog.) the temple of Apollo on the promontory of Actium, which served as a beacon for mariners.

APOLLO (Biog.) a monk of Thebais, who remained 40 years in solitude. Sozom. l. 8, c. 1.

APOLLOCRATES (Hist.) Ἀπολλοκράτης, the eldest son of Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, to whom his father gave the citadel when he took to flight. Plut. in Dion.

APOLLODORUS (Hist.) Ἀπολλοδώρος, who made a league with Cræsus. Paus. l. 4.

APOLLODORUS, an Athenian commander in the time of Cymon, the son of Miltiades. Paus. l. 1.

APOLLODORUS, the name of three Athenian archons, namely, in the 87th, 107th, and 115th Olympiads.

APOLLODORUS, a governor of Babylon in the time of Alexander. Diodor. l. 17; Plut. in Alex.; Q. Curt. l. 5, c. 9.

APOLLODORUS, an Athenian leader of a revolt, who was banished by his countrymen, U. C. 560, A. C. 192.

APOLLODORUS, surnamed Pyragrus, one of the principal inhabitants of Argyrina in Sicily, who suffered by the oppressions of Verres. Cic. in Verr. c. 31.

APOLLODORUS (Biog.) a native of Troezen, who had a statue at Delphi.

APOLLODORUS, an Athenian who flourished in the 93d Olympiad, A. C. 408, and had Zeuxis for a pupil. Plin. l. 35, c. 9.

APOLLODORUS, a statuary in the time of Alexander the Great, who was so dissatisfied with his own works, that he destroyed them all. Plin. l. 34, c. 8.

APOLLODORUS, a grammarian of Athens, son of Asclepias, and disciple to Panætius the philosopher, flourished about the 169th Olympiad, A. C. 104, and wrote many works, of which none are extant except his 'Bibliotheca,' or History of the Gods. The best edition of this work is that of Heyne. Diodor. l. 4; Cic. ad Attic. l. 12, ep. 23; Aul. Gel. l. 17, c. 4; Diog. Laert. l. 1, c. 37.

APOLLODORUS, a rhetorician, who was preceptor to Augustus. Strab. l. 13.

APOLLODORUS, an architect of Damascus, who executed several considerable works for Trajan; but falling afterwards under the displeasure of Adrian was put to death. Justin. l. 4; Dion. l. 69; Procop. de Edif.

APOLLODORUS, the name of several authors, as a poet of Gela, in Sicily, in the age of Menander; a poet of Athens, and another of Tarsus; a writer on Agriculture, quoted by Varro; a physician to one of the Ptolemies, &c.

APOLLODOTUS (Hist.) Ἀπολλοδότος, a governor of Gaza who was besieged by Alexander Jannæus. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13, c. 21.

APOLLONIA (Ecc.) a Christian maid who suffered martyrdom in the reign of Decius. Euseb. Hist. l. 6, c. 41.

APOLLONIA (Bibl.) Ἀπολλωνία, a town of Macedonia, through which St. Paul passed in his way to Thessalonica; Acts xxii. 1; probably the same as the first mentioned under Geography.

APOLLONIA (Geog.) Ἀπολλωνία, the name of several towns, which derive their name from Apollo, who was particularly worshipped there. The principal of these were, 1. A town of Mygdonia, in Macedonia, now Ceres, Seres, or Ascrea, which is an archbishop's see. 2. A town on Mount Athos, in Macedonia, now named Eriassa. 3. A town called Apollonia Magna, on the Euxine, in Thrace, now called Sissipoli. 4. A town of Mysia, on the Rhindacus, probably the present Lupadi. 5. A town on the coast of Illyricum, or Epirus, founded by the Corinthians and Coreyrians. Strabo, Pliny, Stephanus, &c.

APOLLONIA (Numis.) several cities of this name struck medals of Adrian, Antonius Pius, Severus, Jul. Domnia, Caracalla, Geta, Diadumenianus, Heliogabalus, Mæsia, &c. The inscription, for the most part, ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝΙΑΤΑΝ, together with the name of their magistrates, who were supposed to have been prætors. Some medals, inscribed, ΑΠΟΛΛΩΝΙΑΤΑΝ ΠΡΟC ΠΥΝΔΑΚΩ, are known to belong to the last town of this name mentioned under Geography, and the town of Illyricum is also known by the type, as in the annexed figure, of the gardens of Alcinous, within a square on the obverse, and a cow suckling her calf, with the prow of a ship underneath. With regard to the others it is not so easy to determine to which they ought to be ascribed. Vaill. Num. Gr.; Beg. Thes. Brand.; Spanh. Dissertat.

APOLLONIADES (Hist.) a tyrant of Sicily, who was compelled by Timoleon to resign his power.

APOLLONIAS (Hist.) the wife of Attalus, king of Pergamos, by whom he had four children.

APOLLONIDES (Hist.) Ἀπολλωνίδης, a governor of Chios, and a Grecian, who in a sedition of the people was delivered up as a prisoner, with Pharnabazus and Athenoras, to Amphoteris, one of Alexander's naval commanders. Q. Curt. l. 4, c. 6.

APOLLONIDES, a confidant of Demetrius, the son of Antigonus, Plut. in Demet.

APOLLONIUS (Hist.) Ἀπολλώνιος, an officer of Antiochus the Great, who fought with Annibal against the Rhodians. He is probably the same as was afterwards in the service of Antiochus Epiphanes, or, according to Josephus, of Seleucus, as ambassador to the Romans, and as governor of Samaria, in which latter case he was killed by Judas Maccabæus. 1 Maccab. i. 30, &c.; Liv. l. 37, c. 23; Joseph. Antiq. l. 13, c. 18.

APOLLONIUS, surnamed Daus, a general under Demetrius Nicanor, was beaten by Jonathan Maccabæus with the loss of 8,000 men, in the 118th Olympiad, A. C. 148.

APOLLONIUS, a tyrant of one of the cities of Mesopotamia, which was taken by Crassus and destroyed. Plut. in Crass.

APOLLONIUS (Ecc.) a Roman senator and a Christian convert, suffered martyrdom in the reign of Commodus. St. Jeron includes him among the number of ecclesiastical writers, on account of the defence which he is said to have made in the senate of Christianity; but the words of Eusebius, the historian, do not seem to imply that he drew up any formal written defence.

APOLLONIUS (Biog.) a name common to very many writers, &c. Of several it is not known the time in which they lived, as Apollonius, a pagan priest and historian of Aphrodisia; also a physician of Pergamus; another physician of Egypt; an Athenian sculptor; and a sculptor of Rhodes, who executed the celebrated Farnese bull, which is still extant, representing Amphion, Zethes, and Dirce tied to

- the horns of a bull. Varro de Re Rust.; Strab. l. 14; Plin. l. 29, 36, &c.; Suidas; Gruter. Inscript. p. 42.
- APOLLONIUS, of Perga, in Pamphylia, was a mathematician in the reign of Ptolemy Evergetes, A. C. 242, who wrote a treatise on Conic Sections, eight books of which are still extant. According to Pappus he was likewise the author of many other works. The best edition of Apollonius is that by Dr. Halley, Gr. et Lat. fol. Oxon. 1710. Papp. Math. Collect. l. 7; Eutoch. Comment. in Apollon.; Voss. de Scient. Mat. c. 16; Fabric. Bibliothec. l. 3, c. 23.
- APOLLONIUS, of Rhodes, so called because he lived there a long time, though originally of Alexandria, was the son of Plesus, or Sillius, a disciple of Callimachus, the poet, third librarian in the Alexandrine library under Ptolemy Evergetes, and author of a poem, entitled, 'Argonautica,' of which the best editions are Shaw's 4to. Oxon. 1777, 8vo. 1779; and Brunck's 12mo. 1780. Strab. l. 14; Quintil. l. 10, c. 1; Long. de Sublim.; Girald. de Poet. Hist. l. 3; Voss. de Poet. Gr. l. 1, c. 16, &c.
- APOLLONIUS, a stoic of Nissa, in Armenia, and a disciple of Panætius in the 163d Olympiad, A. C. 128, wrote several works mentioned by Strabo and others. Strab. l. 14; Meurs. Syntag. de Apoll.; Voss. de Hist. Græc. l. 1.
- APOLLONIUS, a sculptor of Rhodes, who made the celebrated Farnese Bull, representing Amphion, Zethes, and Dirce, tied to the horns of a bull. Plin. l. 36, c. 5.
- APOLLONIUS, surnamed Molo, a Greek orator of Alabanda in Caria, had Cicero and Julius Cæsar for his pupils. He wrote a History of the Jews, which is answered by Josephus. Plutarch calls him the son of Molo. Cic. de Orat. l. 1; Joseph. cont. Apion.; Plut. in Cæs.; Suet. in Cæs. c. 4.

- APONO, Petrus (Biog.) or Peter Abano, a physician and astronomer of Abano, was born in 1250, and died in 1316. His skill in astrology and philosophy brought upon him the suspicion of witchcraft and heresy, of which he was accused more than once, to the inquisition. At the time of his death he was under the sentence of this court for heresy, and his body was ordered to be disinterred, and to be burnt, which would have been executed if a female servant of his had not contrived to have it removed to another church during the night-time. Among his works were, 1. 'Conciliator Differentiarum Philosophorum et præcipue Medicorum,' Venet. 1471. 2. 'De Venenis, eorumque Remediis,' 3. 'Expositio Problematum Aristotelis,' 4to. Mant. 1475. 4. 'La Fisioremie du Conciliator Pierre de Apono,' 8vo. Padua. 1474. 5. 'Hippocrates de Medicorum Astrologia Libellus,' from the Greek into Latin, 4to. Venet. 1485. 6. History of Aquileia.

AQUILEIA was once so considerable a place that it was called Roma, if we may believe Herodian, and Ausonius reckons it among his illustrious cities.

Auson. in Catalog.

Nona inter claras Aquileia cieberis urbes.

It was enlarged and beautified by the Roman emperors, who made it occasionally their place of residence; and to this place it was that Herod the Great went to meet Augustus for the purpose of preferring an accusation against his two sons. It sustained several sieges at different times, particularly by the tyrant Maximinus, who was killed before this place in 237. On which occasion the females cut off their hair to make bow-strings for their husbands. In 453 it was rendered still more memorable by the obstinate resistance which it opposed to Attilus, who at length took it and reduced it to ruins; but being rebuilt by Narses, it was again taken and ruined by the Lombards in 590, since which it has fallen into insignificance. It is now known by the same name as a small town of Friuli, near the Gulf of Venice, 15 m. N. E. Venice.

Ecclesiastical History of Aquileia.

St. Mark is said to have founded the church of Aquileia, which was erected into a patriarchate that was next in power and dignity to the see of Rome. The first patriarch of Aquileia is said to have been S. Hermonas, who had for his successors Helarius, Chrysogonus, Theodore, Valerian, Chromatius, Theodoret, &c.; who have been enrolled in the calendar of saints. On the fall of Aquileia in political importance the patriarchate was abolished, and the archbishoprics of Gorz and Udina were established in its stead. Several councils were held in this city, as in 381 under pope Damasus; in 400, at which Chromatius presided; afterwards in 553, 698, and 791; and finally in 1409, which was assembled by Gregory XII, after he had been deposed in the council of Piso. Aquileia was the birth-place of Pius I, St. Epiphanius, Chromatius, Paul Diaconus, and many other celebrated men. *Cic. Orat. in Vatin. &c.; Cæs. de Bell. Gall. l. 1; Liv. l. 39, &c.; Strab. l. 5; Mela, l. 2; Joseph. Antiq. l. 16; Plin. l. 3, c. 19; Sueton. in August. &c.; Ptol. l. 8; Herod. c. 7; Capitolin. in Max.; Paul Diacon. de Reb. AQUILIA SEVERA, a vestal virgin, whom Heliogabalus secretly married. There is a medal of this Aquilia given under the head of Numismatics. [Vide Aquilia, gens]

AQUILIA, gens (Numis.) the name of this family occurs frequently on medals, but mostly written with double L. M. AQUIL. M. F. M. N. Manius Aquillius Manii Filius Manii Nepos, to which is added SICILIA; Caius AQUILLI FLORUS, and on the other side PRO CONSULE; also on the obverse of some other medals, CAESAR AUGUSTUS, and on the reverse Lucius AQUILLIVS FLORUS III. VIR.

AQUILIA SEVERA, the second wife of Helio-gabalus, is written JULIA AQUILIA SEVERA, on medals where her effigy is given, as in the annexed figure.

AQUILINUS, Vettius (Hist.) a consul in the reign of Adrian, A.D. 125; also another consul, A.D. 162, who is supposed to be the same person. Grut. Inscript.

AQUILINUS, Junius, a consul, A.D. 249.

AQUILINUS, Vettius, a consul and Roman prefect, A.D. 286. Cassiodor. Chron.

AQUILIUS, L. and M. (Hist.) of the family of the Aquilii, brothers and sons of Brutus, by a sister of Collatinus, took the part of Tarquin the Proud, and entered into a conspiracy for his restoration. Dionys. Hal. l. 5; Liv. l. 2, c. 4.

AQUILIUS TUSCUS, Caius, a consul, U.C. 267, A.C. 487; gained an advantage over the Hernici, for which he received the honour of an ovation. Livy and Dionysius give a different account in some particulars of this affair. Dionys. l. 8; Liv. l. 2, c. 40.

AQUILIUS FLORUS, a consul and colleague of L. Corn. Scipio, defeated the Carthaginians, U.C. 495.

AQUILIUS, L., a prætor of Sicily, U.C. 578. Cic. in Ferr. 3, c. 54, &c.

AQUILIUS NEPOS, M., a consul with Sempronius Tuditanus, U.C. 653, A.C. 101.

AQUILIUS, Manius, or according to Justin, Marcus; a consul, was defeated by Mithridates, in Bithynia, and being afterwards treacherously delivered into his hands, was put to death with every circumstance of ignominy. Liv. Epit. l. 77, &c.; Justin. l. 36; Appian. de Bell. Mithrid.

AQUILIUS JULIANUS, M., a consul, A.D. 38.

AQUILIUS REGULUS, a general under Vespasian, was conquered by Civilis, a chief of the Batavi. Tacit. Hist. l. 4, c. 15.

AQUILIUS SABINUS, a lawyer of consular dignity, who was consul twice, namely, A.D. 214, and 216, is supposed to have been the father of the vestal Aquilia Severa before-mentioned. Lamprid. in Heliogab.; Fasti. Cons.; Cassiodor. Chron.; Rutil. in Vit. Juriscon.

AQUILIUS, Cneus (Biog.) a comic poet, flourished about U.C. 570, A.C. 182. Varro, de Lin. Lat.; Aut. Gell. l. 3, c. 3.

AQUILIUS GALLUS, a distinguished lawyer, who flourished about 65 years A.C. wrote, 1. 'De Dolo Malo,' on the occasion of a fraud which Octavia, the mistress of Q. Velleius Varro, wanted to practise upon him. 2. 'De Posthumorum Institutione.' 3. 'De Stipulatione,' &c. To him has been attributed the 'Lexicon Aquilia,' which is, however, more generally considered to be the work of one Aquilius, a tribune of the people of a much earlier date. Cic. Brut. c. 42, &c.

AQUILIUS NIGER, author of a history of the war of Modena, mentioned by Suetonius. Sueton. in Aug. c. 11.

AQUILIUS SEVERUS, otherwise called Achilius or Acilius, a poet and historian of the 4th century, wrote a journal of his own life in prose and verse. S. Hieron. de Script. Eccles. c. 3; Du Pin. Bibliothek.

AQUIN (Hist.) vide Aquino and Aquinas.

AQUINIUS (Hist.) vide Aquinas.

AQUINO (Hist.) an illustrious and ancient family, and one of the seven grandees of the kingdom of Naples, after that the kingdom of the Lombards was divided into 30 duchies. From the duchy of Benevento sprang the county of Aquino, which was held by Antenolfo in 879. The principal members of this family are as follow:

AQUINO, Adinolfo d', I, surnamed Summucula, in the reign of Otho III, conquered the fortress of Rocca Secca.

AQUINO, Adinolfo d', II, conquered the Minturnians about 1038.

AQUINO, Landolf d', in the reign of Lotharius, defended, in 1137, the state of Mount Cassin.

AQUINO, Thomas Count d', as commander-in-chief under the emperor Frederic II, brought all Naples, in 1221, under his subjection, and afterwards accompanied the emperor to the Holy Land, where he served him on many important occasions.

AQUINO, Landolf d', in 1435 took part with Alphonsus, king of Arragon, whom he assisted in obtaining the kingdom of Naples.

AQUINO, Ladislaus d', was created duke of Bicheil, for his distinguished services.

AQUINO, Raimond d', distinguished himself in the service of Manfred, king of Naples, but being taken prisoner by the French, died in captivity.

AQUINO, Adinolf d', was a successful warrior in the service of Robert, king of Sicily, in three different wars.

AQUINO, Thomas d', II, was taken prisoner by the Germans after a long service under Philip V of Spain and Naples, but died captain-general of Navarre in 1721.

AQUINO, Ladislaus d' (Ecc.) of the same family as the preceding, was created cardinal by Paul V in 1616, and died in 1621, at the moment of his election to the papal chair.

AQUINO, Thomas d' (Bior.) or St. Thomas Aquinas, commonly called the Angelic Doctor, of the preceding family, was born in the castle of Aquino in 1224, and died in 1274, leaving a vast number of books which were printed in 17 vols. fol. at Venice, in 1490, Nuremberg, in 1496; Rome, in 1570; Venice, in 1594; Cologne, in 1612, &c.

AQUINO, Philip d', a rabbi of Carpentras, whose proper name was Mordicai, took the name of Aquino from the place where he was baptized into the Christian church. He died in 1650, leaving among his works, 1. 'Dictionarium Hebræo-Chaldaeo-Talmudico-Rabbinicum,' fol. Paris. 1629. 2. 'Racines de la Langue Sainte,' fol. Paris. 1620. 3. 'Explication des Treize Moyens dont se servoient les Rabbins pour entendre le Pentateuque,' &c.

AQUINO, Lerris d', son of the preceding, was as well versed in rabbinical learning, and the oriental languages, as his father, of which he left many proofs at his death.

AQUINO, Anthony d', grandson of Philip d' Aquino, was physician to Louis XIV.

AQUINO, Charles d', a Jesuit and poet of Naples, was born in 1651. He wrote among other things, 1. 'Sacra Exequialia in Funere Jacobi II, Magnæ Britannie Regis,' &c. 2. 'Carmen Augurale Josepho Austriaco Romanorum et Hungarie Regis,' fol. Rom. 1698. 3. 'Lexicon Militare,' &c. 2 vols. fol. Rom. 1728.

AQUINO, or Aquin, Louis Claude d', a French musician, was born in 1694, and died in 1772. His power of executing on the harpsichord at the early age of six years, and his wonderful skill on the organ in after life, excited the admiration of the whole musical world in his day.

AQUINO, de Chateau Lyon, a miscellaneous writer of the preceding family, who died in 1797, was the author of 'Contes mis en vers par un petit Cousin de Rabelais,' 8vo. 1775, and other things.

AQUINO (Geog.) the ancient Aquinum, a town of Naples, in Terra di Lavoro, a bishop's see, suffragan to the archbishop of Capua, was destroyed by the emperor Conrad, so that it is now not more than a village, 20 m. S. by E. Sora. [Vide Aquinum]

AQUINUM (Geog.) now Aquino, a town of Latium, on the borders of the Samnites, where Juvenal was born.

AQUINUS, the name of some kings of Norway.

AQUINUS I, succeeded Magnus IV in 1232, and died after a reign of 30 years, whilst he was making a successful war on Scotland. Hect. Boeth. Hist. Rer. Scot.; Krantz. Hist. Nor.

AQUINUS II, succeeded his brother Eric, surnamed the Swede, in 1300, and died after a reign of 15 years. Olaus. Mag.; Krantz. Hist. l. 1.

AQUINUS III, succeeded his father Magnus on the throne of Sweden, but being driven from his kingdom, he reigned two years in Norway. Krantz.

AQUINUS IV, nephew of the preceding, succeeded his father Magnus in 1359, and having married Margaret, daughter of Valdemar III, king of Denmark, succeeded him by right of his wife on the throne of Denmark. By the persuasion of his queen he also recovered the throne of Sweden from Albert, whom he took prisoner in 1387, so that the three kingdoms were united in his person, and in that of his queen who succeeded him.

AQUINUS (Biog.) or Aquinius, a Latin poet, flourished U. C. 693, A. C. 61, in the time of Catullus and Cicero, both of whom mention him in terms of contempt. Cic. Tusc. l. 5; Catull. l. 14, v. 18; Foss. de Poet. Lat.

AQUINUS, Juger, a Latin historian of the first century, wrote the Life of Augustus Cæsar. Foss. de Hist. Lat.

AQUISGRANUM (Geog.) the Latin name for the town now called Aix-la-Chapelle. [Vide Aix-la-Chapelle]

AQUITANIA (Geog.) one of the three provinces of ancient Gaul, which Pliny calls Gallia Aquitania, the Notitia, Provincia Aquitania. Its original name was Armorica, which was changed to that of Aquitania, from the number of its waters. It comprehended what is now known by the names of Guienne and Gascony, the former of which is in all probability a corruption of the word Aquitania.

Boundaries. Aquitania was bounded on the N. by Gallia Lugdunensis; on the S. by Gallia Narbonensis; on the E. by the ocean; and the W. by Hispania.

Principal Towns. The principal towns in Aquitania were as follow:—

Ancient.	Modern.	Ancient.	Modern.
Burdegala,	Bordeaux.	Aturus,	Airc.
Bajona,	Bayonne.	Cadurcum,	Cahors.
Aquæ,	Aqs or Dax.	Auscii,	Ausch.

History. Aquitania was entirely subdued by Julius Cæsar, and after remaining upwards of four centuries in the hands of the Romans, it was taken by the Goths, who were dispossessed of it by Clovis. It then became a duchy, and from that was erected into a kingdom by Charlemagne, for his son Charles in 777, who was succeeded by Pepin in 817. It afterwards became again a duchy, and one part of it, namely, Guienne, fell into the hands of the English, who retained it until the reign of Charles VIII, in 1452, when the whole of Aquitania was finally united to the French crown. *Cæs. de Bell. Extent, Boundaries, and Division. Arabia is 1430 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth, and is bounded on the E. by the Persian Gulf; on the S. by the Arabian Sea, and the Straits of Babelmandel; on the W. by the Red Sea; and on the N. by Syria. It was divided by the ancients into Arabia Petraea, now Baraab; Arabia Deserta, now Berjera; and Arabia Felix, now Aigaman, Aiman, or Jemen. By the moderns it has since been sub-divided into the provinces of Hedsjar, Yemen, Hadramaut, Ornan, Iachsua, Hadsjar, and Nedsjed.

Principal Towns. The principal towns of Arabia Petra, were Petra the capital, Bostra, now Bassora, Medava or Medbah, and Tor; that of Arabia Deserta, or Anna on the Euphrates; those of Arabia Felix, are Mecca, Medina, Zebid, and Mocha, Batrin, Lahsa, &c.

Mountains. The two principal mountains are Horeb and Sinai, so well known in Holy Writ.

Rivers. The principal rivers are the Euphrates and the Tigris.

History. Arabia, as we learn from the Scriptures, was inhabited by the Moabites, Amalekites, Midianites, and Amorites, who had their several kings, of whom but little is known except their names.

Succession of Arab Kings.

Kahtan, or Joctan, the son of Heber, reigned A. C. 1817.

Yarab, Yashab, grandsons of the preceding.

Abd-Shems, surnamed Saba, built the city of Saba, or Mareb.

Hamyar, the son of Abd-Shems, from whom the tribe or kingdom of Hamyar derived its name.

Wayel, Alsacuc, and Yaqfer, son, grandson, and great grandson, followed in succession.

Dhu Rujash succeeded Yaafar.

Al Nooman, the son of Yaafar, and Asmah his son.

Shaddad, the son of Ad, the son of Al Matata, the son of Saba, succeeded Loknan and Dhu Sadad, his two brothers.

Al Hareth, the son of Dhu Sadad, had first the surname of Toba, or Successor, which was afterwards assumed by his successors.

Dhul Karnain Assaab, the son of Rayish.

Dhul Manar, his son, and Africus, his grandson, from whom Africa is said to have received its name.

Dhu'l Adhaar Amru, who was expelled in favour of Sharbabil, of the posterity of Alsacac.

Al Hodhad, the son of Sharbabil, and Balkis, his son, or, as some assert, his daughter, who was the queen of Sheba, that visited Solomon.

Nashero'neam, surnamed Malee, Shamer Yaraash, his son, and Abu Malee, his grandson.

Amram, the son of Amen, a descendant of Cahlan, the brother of Hamyar, and Hamru, his son.

Al Alkran, the son of Abimalaec; Dhu Habshan, and Tobba, his two sons, successively.

Colaicarb, or Molaie Yacrab.

Abu Carb Asaad, who introduced Judaism amongst the Hamyarites, for which he was put to death by his subjects.

Hassan Tobbai cut off his father's murderers, and was slain by his brother.

Amru Tobbai succeeded his father Hassan, and was succeeded by Abd Celal, the son of Dul'awad, who had Tobba, surnamed Tobba Minor, the son of Hassan, for a successor.

Al Hareth, who embraced Judaism.

Morthed, the son of Celal, and Waciaa, his son.

Abraham, the son of Alsabah Sabban, who is said to have had a famous sword.

Dhu Shanater, who is said to have had six fingers on one hand, was dethroned by his subjects.

Yusef, surnamed Dhu Nomas, reigned about 70 years before Mahomet, and persecuted all who would not embrace Judaism.

Dhu Jadem, the last of the Hamyaritic race, was expelled by the Ethiopian kings, who established the Christian religion in Arabia.

Aryal, Abraha ebn al Sabah, Yaesum, his son, and Masruk, another son, were the Ethiopian kings who reigned in Arabia until Seif Ebn Dhu Yajan expelled the Ethiopians, but was himself shortly after killed. The succeeding princes Wahsar, Marzaban, Silhan, Jorgis or Georgius, and Bazan, were appointed by the Persian princes till Arabia fell into the hands of Mahomet, who, with his successors, reigned not only over Arabia, but all Syria, and took up their residence in Bagdad. [Vide Syria]

Thus far our account of the ancient Arabs has been collected from the most authentic Arab historians. The Greek and Roman writers furnish but few materials, even of the transactions in which their own nations were concerned. Arabia was never entirely subjugated by any other power. The Egyptians under Sesostris did little more than restrain the Arabian princes in their excursions, having never been able to make them tributary. Alexander contemplated the conquest of Arabia, when death interrupted him in his career of ambition; and Antigonus, one of his successors, made an unsuccessful effort to invade their territories. The Romans under Lucullus are supposed to have made some parts tributary; and Pompey, by means of his general, Scaurus, obliged Aretas, an Arabian prince, to receive a Roman garrison. Aelius Gallus also, or as he is otherwise called, Aelius Largus, made an unfortunate expedition into the interior of Arabia in the time of Augustus; and much was done towards the reduction of this country in the time of Trajan, but after making several parts of Arabia Petraea subject to the Roman empire, the emperor was obliged to desist from further conquests. In subsequent ages the Arabians, particularly that tribe of them well known by the name of the Saracens, became the assailants in their turn, and under the conduct of Mahomet and his successors contributed materially to the downfall of the Roman empire.

Ecclesiastical History. Christianity was early introduced into Arabia as we learn from the Scriptures, where we find the Arabians reckoned among the people on whom the Holy Ghost fell. St. Paul is afterwards said to have gone into Arabia, which received moreover an accession of followers from among the number of those who fled to escape the persecution and troubles of the eastern churches in the second and third centuries. These being mostly of the Jacobite communion, this sect was prevalent among the Arabians, who were however much addicted to heresies and schisms in general, and on the introduction of Mahometanism, deserted the profession of the gospel altogether. Before the age of Mahomet they had numerous churches and several bishops, one of whom was styled absolutely the bishop of the Arabs, whose residence was chiefly at Akula, which is supposed to be the same as Cufa.

Authors who have written on Arabia.

Herodotus, Xenophon, Agatharcides, Pomponius Mela, Josephus, Pliny, Ptolemy, Agathemerus, Eusebius, Sozomenus, Spartianus, Julius Capitolinus, Nicophorus, Procopius, Zonaras, Cedrenus, Stephanus Byzantinus, Elmaccinus, Abulfeda, Abulpharagius, Johannes Leo, Pocock, Marmol, Ockley, &c.

ARABIA (Numis.) is represented on some medals of Trajan, as in the annexed figure, of a female in a long robe, bearing in her right hand a branch, and in her left a reed; at her feet a camel: on the obverse of this medal, besides the head of the emperor, is the inscription ARABIA ADQ. ADQUI. ADQUIS. or ADQUISITA; on the reverse, Senatus, Populus Que, Romanus, OPTIMO PRINCIPI. Senatus Consulto. Another medal of this emperor is inscribed, ΔΗΜΑΡΧ ΕΞ ΥΠΑΤΟΥ; and others, ARABIA L. ARACUS, one of the Ephori, who was sent as an ambassador into Asia, whether the same as the preceding is doubtful. Xenoph. Hellen. l. 2, 3, &c.

ARAD (Bibl.) עָרָד, a city south of the tribe of Judah, in the land of Canaan, the king of which defeated the Israelites. Numb. xxi. 1. It was afterwards destroyed among the other Canaanitish cities; but, according to Eusebius, was rebuilt and was situated 20 miles from Hebron. Euseb. Onom.

ARADIAN (Hist.) a Lybian warrior, who fought in single combat with Probus, afterwards emperor, who having killed him, erected a tomb in honour of his valour. Vopisc. in Proh. c. 9.

ARADUS (Geog.) Ἀραδός, an island and a city of Phœnicia, was joined to the continent by a bridge. The town was built on the coast of the Mare Syrium, or Mediterranean, in the seventh Olympiad, A. C. 750, and is fabled by the ancients to have been the place near which Andromeda was exposed to the sea monster. It was situated near to a town called Antaratius, or Orthosia, now Tortosa. Both these towns were formerly episcopal, but are now in ruins, under the government of the Turks. Scyl. Periplus; Strab. l. 16; Mel. l. 2, c. 7; Dionys. Perieges.; Plin. l. 5, c. 20; Euseb. in Chron.

ARADUS (Numm.) struck coins or medals as an independent state, and also of the emperors Vespasian, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, M. Aurelius, L. Verus, Sept. Severus, Caracalla, and Heliogabalus, bearing the inscription, ΑΡΑΔΙΩΝ ΗΚΥ. Aradiarum, Anno 128. IMP. 138. ΘΑΡ. 139, &c., marking the epocha, which was dated from the period when the Aradians were delivered from the subjection of the Syrian kings; sometimes they added, I. E. A. i. e. Sacræ liberæ inviolabilis. Goltz. Insul.; Vaill. Num. Gr.; Hard. Chron. Vet. Test. &c.

ARÆ (Geog.) rocks between Africa and Sardinia, which are supposed to be between the Romans and the Africans, the same as the Ægates. [Vide Ægates] On this coast, the fleet of Æneas was shipwrecked. Virg. Æn. l. 1, v. 109.

ARÆ is also the name of other places; as, 1. Aræ Caesaris, now Feliki, a town of European Sarmatia. 2. Aræ Flavie, now Nordlingen, a town of Germany. 3. Aræ Mutie, now Aremuzzi, a town of Etruria. 4. Aræ Sextianæ, now Lugo, a town of Hispania Tarraconensis.

ARAGISUS (Hist.) duke of Benevento, embroiled himself with Charlemagne, but afterwards submitted to do him homage. Aimon. Hist. l. 6, c. 7; Sigon. de Regn. Ital.; Mezer. in Carol. et Ducl. Mag. D.

ARAGON, Tullia d' (Biog.) a poetess of Italy, in the 17th century, was the natural daughter of Peter Tagliava d'Aragon, archbishop of Palermo, and a cardinal, who was himself an illegitimate descendant of the house of Arragon. She wrote many things that procured her many admirers in her day, but their reputation did not long survive her.

ARAGON (Geog.) vide Arragon.

ARALIU (Hist.) or Analius, sixth king of the Assyrians, reigned 11 years. Julian. African. et Euseb. in Chron.

ARAM (Bibl.) אֲרָם, the fifth son of Shem, who peopled Syria, the inhabitants of which were from him called Arameans. Genes. x. 23; Joseph. Ant. l. 1, c. 6.

ARAM, Eugene (Biog.) a self-taught scholar of Ramsgill, in Yorkshire, who made himself master of the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, would have distinguished himself by his talents if he had not killed a man in a fit of jealousy, for which he suffered the sentence of the law.

ARAMSCHAH (Hist.) son of Ibek, who had been a slave to Shehadeddin, sultan of the Gaurides, succeeded his father on the throne of Delhi, but was soon dispossessed of his power by another freedman of Shehadeddin.

ARAMONT, Gabriel d' (Hist.) a Gascon gentleman, was ambassador from Henry of France to the sultan Soliman II, whom he persuaded to make an attack on the coast of Italy with his fleet.

Pausanias gives an account of the kings, in some particulars, different from this. In the time of the Trojan war, Agamemnon was king of Argos, which 80 years after fell into the hands of the Heracidae; but, after the defeat of the Persians, Argos became a republic, sometimes tributary to the Lacedæmonians, and sometimes to the Athenians, until the final conquest of Greece by the Romans. On the dismemberment of the Roman empire, Argos was under the dominions of lords, who were dependant on Constantinople; the last of whom was Peter Cornaro, whose widow sold the seignory of Argos in 1383 to the republic of Venice. The sanguine of Corinth became master of it in 1462; but it was shortly after retaken by the Venetians, and finally fell into the hands of the Turks. Argos retains its ancient name, and is a bishop's see. ARGUS, a son of Agenor; also a son of Danaus, who built the ship Argo; a son of Jupiter and Niobe, who was the first child that the father of the gods had by a mortal, and the builder of Argos, of which he was the fourth king; likewise the dog of Ulysses, who knew his master after an absence of 20 years, &c. Hom. Odys. l. 17; Apollod. l. 1, &c.; Hygin. Fab. 145, &c.; Paus. l. 2, &c.

ARGYLESHIRE (Geog.) vide Argyllshire.

ARGYLL, Colin, Earl of (Hist.) second lord Campbell, of the family mentioned under Heruldry, was one of the commissioners for negotiating a truce with king Edward IV, of England, in 1463, and again in 1471, for settling the treaty of alliance with king Edward IV, by which James, prince of Scotland, was affianced to Cecilia, Edward's youngest daughter. He was also one of the commissioners sent to France to renew the treaty with that crown in 1484; and also one of the commissioners for concluding a pacification with king Richard III, in the same year. He died in 1493, after having filled the highest posts under James III and James IV.

ARGYLL, Colin, Third Earl of, was in the special confidence of James V of Scotland, whose cause he supported against the queen-mother and the rebel lords. He died in 1533, holding the office of justice-general of Scotland, and other offices.

ARGYLL, Archibald, Fifth Earl of, and grandson of the preceding, one of the most powerful and popular leaders of the Protestants, adhered to the party of the queen-mother in opposition to the queen Mary; but when he saw the latter was hardly dealt with, he supported her interests, and was constituted her majesty's lieutenant in Scotland; and in 1572 was constituted lord high chancellor, which office he held until his death in 1575.

ARGYLL, Colin, Sixth Earl of, was early engaged in the quarrel with the regent Morton, and advised the king, James VI, to deprive the latter of the regency, and to take the government into his own hands. He was afterwards appointed Lord High Chancellor of England, which appointment he held until his death, in 1584.

ARGYLL, Archibald, Seventh Earl of, was sent against the popish curls of Huntley and Errol, but met with a most dreadful defeat in 1594. He afterwards entered into the service of Philip III of Spain, distinguished himself in the wars of the Low Countries, and died of the Roman Catholic persuasion in 1638, at the age of 62.

ARGYLL, Archibald, Eighth Earl of, one of the covenanters, was engaged on many occasions against the king's forces; but in 1650 he had the chief hand in bringing over king Charles II to Scotland, and at the king's coronation at Scone he placed the crown on his majesty's head. Notwithstanding which he complied with the measures of the usurping powers, and was returned under Richard Cromwell's protectorate for the county of Aberdeen, went up to London, and took his seat in the house, where he was generally eyed as a concealed royalist. He procured, however, no favour on that account; for at the restoration, on going to congratulate the king, he was forbidden access, and committed to the Tower, and afterwards to the castle of Edinburgh, where he was tried on a charge of high treason, found guilty, and sentenced to be beheaded. This sentence was executed upon him in 1660. He is inserted in Walpole's 'Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors,' having written 'Marquis of Argyll, his Instructions to a Son,' to which Park has added, 'The Marquiss of Argyll's Speech on Peace, to be sent to his Majesty.'

ARGYLL, Archibald, Ninth Earl of, and son of the preceding.

was twice sentenced to die, first on account of the interest which he took in procuring his father's pardon, when his sentence was reprieved by the king, and the second time because he refused to take the oaths required of him as a privy councillor, without a qualification which he put in. He for a time warded off the execution of his sentence by escaping from the castle of Edinburgh, where he was confined in 1681, and flying to Holland remained there till the death of Charles II. He then joined the expedition of the duke of Monmouth, on the unsuccessful termination of which he was taken by some militiamen, near the Clyde, conveyed to Glasgow, and thence led bare-headed; his hands tied behind him, to the castle of Edinburgh, where he was at last beheaded agreeably to his second sentence in 1685.

ARGYLL, Archibald, Tenth Earl of, and First Duke of, on receiving intelligence of his father's invasion, put himself into the king's hands, and offered his services against the invaders. He was afterwards very strenuous in support of king William, and died in 1703, full of honours and distinction.

ARGYLL, John, Second Duke of, was one of the most distinguished captains of the age, who fought under Marlborough and shared in his victories. He afterwards had a principal part in suppressing the insurrection of 1715; but on his return to political life he joined the ranks of the opposition, in which he continued until his death in 1743.

ARGYLL, Archibald, Third Duke of, brother of the preceding, was employed more as a statesman than as a soldier; but he took up arms in defence of the reigning family in 1715, and was wounded twice at the battle of Sheriffmuir, where his brother commanded. He afterwards continued at the head of affairs in Scotland until his death in 1761.

ARGYLL (Her.) or Argyle, Duke of, one of the titles enjoyed by the Campbell family. [Vide Campbell] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Campbell, duke of Argyll, marquis of Kintyre and Lorn, earl of Argyll, Campbell, and Cowal, viscount of Lochoy and Glenila, lord Campbell, Lorn, Inverary, &c.

Arms. Quarterly, first and fourth gironny of eight pieces or, and sable, for Campbell second and third argent, a galley or lymphad sable, sails furled up, flags and pendant flying, and oars in action for the lordship of Lorn. Behind the shield, a baton and sword, accole saltireways, the baton gules semée of thistles or, and ensigned with an imperial crown, and the crest of Scotland, the sword hilted and pommelled or, being the two badges of the great master of the household and high justiciary of Scotland.

Crest. A boar's head couped or.

Supporters. Two lions guardant gules, armed and langued azure, standing on a compartment, whereon are the words "Vix ea nostra voco."

Motto. "Ne obliviscaris."

ARGYLLSHIRE (Geog.) or Argyleshire, a county of Scotland.

Boundaries and Extent. It is bounded on the N. by Invernessshire, E. by the counties of Perth and Dumbarton, and S. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, by which it is broken into islands and peninsulas. It is 114 miles long from the Mull of Kintyre and Cowal, and 40 miles in its greatest breadth.

Islands, &c. The chief islands attached to this county are Mull, Islay, Jura, Tirey, and Col; the peninsulas are Kintyre, Cowal, &c.

Towns. Inverary is the chief town.

ARGYNNIS (Myth.) an epithet of Venus. Propert. l. 3, el. 5; Athen. l. 13, c. 8.

ARGYRA (Myth.) a nymph, the mistress of the shepherd Selimnus. She was changed into a fountain, and he into a river of the same name, whose waters make lovers forget the object of their affections. Paus. l. 7.

ARGYRA (Geog.) a town of Sicily, the birth-place of Diodorus Siculus.

ARGYRIPA (Geog.) vide Arpi.

ARGYROPHILUS (Hist.) or Argyrus, the name of a family who, according to Zonaras, distinguished itself for some time at Constantinople.

ARGYROPHILUS, Leo, a brave general in the reign of Michael, was also the founder of a monastery.

ARGYROPHILUS, Eustachius, grandson of the preceding, had the chief command of the troops in the East, and beat the Saracens in many engagements. He is said to have died of poison.

ARGYROPHILUS, Leo, was also a commander in chief.

ARGYROPHILUS, Romanus, son of the preceding, was made emperor in 1028, and strangled after a reign of four years.

ARGYROPHILUS, Basilus, brother of the preceding, was governor of Samos.

ARGYROPHILUS, Marianus, a monk, was deeply engaged in the intrigues between Stephen, son of Romanus Lecapenes, and Constantine Porphyrogenetus. Du Cange Fam. Byz.

ARGYROPHILUS, John (Biog.) doubtless of the above-mentioned family, fled into Italy on the taking of Constantinople by Mahomet II, and contributed to the revival of Greek literature in the west.

ARGYRUS (Hist.) a family of Bari in Italy, who took an active part in the revolutions which distracted that country in the 11th century. Whether it be a branch of the preceding family or not is doubtful.

ARGYRUS, Melon, revolted against the Greek emperors, and commenced a war which lasted with various success for 60 years.

ARGYRUS, Leo, brother of the preceding, was killed in an engagement during this war.

ARGYRUS, son of Argyrus Melon, was delivered up to the Greeks by the inhabitants of Bari, on their making peace with them; but he was afterwards permitted to return to his country, where he died in 1034.

ARGYRUS, another son of Melon, was first engaged against the Greeks, and afterwards on their side.

ARGYRUS, Isaac (Biog.) a Greek monk and a mathematician of the 11th century, wrote on geodesy, chronology, and other subjects.

ARIA (Hist.) vide Arria.

ARIADNE (Myth.) 'Αριάδνη, daughter of Minos, king of Crete, falling in love with Theseus, assisted him to get out of the labyrinth in which he was shut to be devoured by the Minotaur. She was afterwards married to Theseus, but being abandoned by him on the island of Naxos, is said to have had Bacchus for a lover, and at her death to have been placed among the constellations, forming a crown of seven stars.

ARIARATHES (Hist.) the name of several kings of Cappadocia, in Asia Minor.

ARIARATHES I, son of Ariamnes, succeeded his father in the 104th Olympiad, A. C. 362, accompanied Darius in his expedition into Egypt, where he acquired much glory.

ARIARATHES II, son of the preceding, succeeded his uncle Orophernes or Holophernes, in the 112th Olympiad, A. C. 330, but being beaten in two engagements, and at length taken prisoner by Perdiceas, the Macedonian general, he was crucified by order of the latter in the eighth year of his reign.

ARIARATHES III, son of the preceding, recovered Cappadocia from Amyntas, a general and successor of Perdiceas, in the 115th Olympiad, A. C. 317.

ARIARATHES IV, succeeded in the 139th Olympiad, A. C. 224.

ARIARATHES V, son and successor of the preceding, assisted Antiochus against the Romans, with whom he afterwards formed an alliance, and died after a reign of 62 years.

ARIARATHES VI, succeeded his father in the 154th Olympiad, A. C. 161, and died after a troublesome reign, in which he was at one time dispossessed of his throne, in the 162d Olympiad, A. C. 129.

ARIARATHES VII, son of the preceding, succeeded his father, after having escaped the parricidal fury of his mother Laodicea, who, having killed her five other sons, was put to death by the populace. He was treacherously murdered by one Gordius, at the instigation of Mithridates Eupator.

ARIARATHES VIII, was scarcely seated on the throne of his father, before he was treacherously assassinated by the same Mithridates.

ARIARATHES IX, succeeded his brother by favour of the Cappadocians, but being conquered by Mithridates he was put to death.

ARIARATHES X, succeeded Ariobarzanes II, in the 174th Olympiad, A. C. 41, and was dispossessed of his kingdom by M. Anthony, after which Cappadocia became a Roman province. Polyb. 1. 3, &c.; Diodor. 1. 18, &c.; Liv. 1. 38, &c.; Strab. 1. 12, &c.; Justin. 1. 13, &c.; *Tacit. He was descended from a good family, his father being governor of Rheggio at the time of his birth; but is still more distinguished for his poetical talent, which procured him not only the patronage of princes during his life, but also the highest place in the rank of poets of any age. He reckoned, among his patrons, the emperor Charles V; pope Leo X; Alphonso, duke of Ferrara, (in whose service he died) and others. His fame, as a poet, is built on his 'Orlando Furioso,' which is said to have gone through eighty editions, and to have been translated into most of the European languages. The English public were made acquainted with it through the versions of Sir John Harrington and Mr. Huggins, which have been superseded by that of Mr. Hoole, which was completed in 1783 in 5 vols. 8vo. The most esteemed editions of the Orlando are that printed at Venice, fol. 1584, with Ruscelli's notes, and engravings by Parro; that of Molini, 4 vols. 8vo. 1772; that of Pankouke's, 10 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1787; that by Mr. Isola, 4 vols. 8vo. London, 1789. Besides this poem, Ariosto wrote some comedies; as the 'Casaria,' 'Suppositi,' 'La Lena,' and 'Il Negromante,' in prose and verse; and the 'Scolastici,' in verse. Two medals were struck in honour of Ariosto, from one of which his effigy has been taken as in Plate XXVII.

ARISTARCHIUS (Bibl.) Ἀριστάρχος, a native of Thessalonica, was a disciple and companion of St. Paul, whom he attended in his travels into Greece and Asia, and afterwards to Rome. Ado and the Roman martyrology call him bishop of Thessalonica; but, according to the Greeks, he was bishop of Apamea, and was beheaded under Nero. Acts xix. 29; Col. iv. &c.

ARISTARCHUS (Hist.) an Athenian, who, favouring an oligarchy, fled from Athens, and delivered Ænoe to the Barcians. Thucyd. l. 8, c. 98.

ARISTARCHUS, a chief man of Ambracia, at whose persuasion the inhabitants expelled the garrison of Philip, king of Macedon, and took the government on themselves. Diodor. l. 17.

ARISTARCHUS (Biog.) a tragic poet of Tegea in the 82d Olympiad, A.C. 452, wrote about 70 tragedies, two of which were rewarded with the prize, and one called Achilles was translated by Ennius into Latin verse. Euseb. in Chron.; Gyrald. de Poet. Hist. l. 7, &c.

ARISTARCHUS, a Greek philosopher of Samos, maintained the doctrine of Pythagoras, which is the favourite notion of modern times, that the earth moves round the sun. Of his works there is extant a Treatise on the Magnitude and Distance of the Sun and Moon; a Latin translation of which, with Pappus' Explanations, was first published by Commandine, 4to. Pisaur. 1572; afterwards by Dr. Wallis, in Greek, with Commandine's Version, 8vo. Oxon. 1688. A work entitled 'De Systemate Mundi,' which appeared in 1644 under the name of Aristarchus, was the fiction of Roberval. Vitrur. de Architect. l. 1; Plut. de Fac. in Orb. Lun.

ARISTARCHUS, a grammarian of Samothrace, in the 158th Olympiad, A.C. 148. He wrote commentaries on Homer, in which he rejected all verses as spurious of which he disapproved. Horace and Ovid distinguished him for the rigour of his criticism. Hor. ad Pison.

Arguet ambigui dictum, mutanda notabis, Fiet Aristarchus.

Ovid. Pont. l. 3, ep. 9, v. 24.

Magnus Aristarche major Homerus erat.*

Falling into a dropsy, he starved himself to death in the 72d year of his age, leaving two sons named Aristarchus, and Aristagoras, who were both fools. Aristarchus the elder was sold for a slave, but liberated by the Athenians out of respect to the father. Cic. ad Famil. l. 3, ep. 11; Quintil. l. 10, c. 1; Suidas.

ARISTARCHUS, physician to Berenice, wife to Antiochus, surnamed Theos. Polyan. l. 8, c. 29.

ARISTÆAS (Hist.) Ἀριστεύς, or Aristæus, a prefect or officer under Ptolemy Philadelphus, of Jewish extraction, who was sent, as is reported, by the king to the high priest Eleazer, to demand some learned men to translate the Bible, upon which Eleazer sent him 72 persons, whose version is known by the name of the Septuagint. A work entitled 'Historia de S. Scripture Interpretibus,' containing a history of this translation, is ascribed by some to this Aristæus, but this has been a matter of considerable dispute among the learned. This history was first published in the Bible printed at Rome, fol. 2 vols. 1471; and again at Oxford, 8vo. 1692. Joseph. l. 12, c. 2; Tertullian. in Apol. c. 12; Euseb. Præp. Evang. l. 9; Epiphani. de Pond.; Hieron. Præf. in Pentat.

ARISTÆAS (Biog.) a poet of Proconnesus, who lived about the time of Cyrus and Croesus, of whom some verses are quoted by Longinus. It is fabled of this poet that he appeared seven years after his death to his countrymen, and 540 years after to the people of Metapontum, in Italy, and ordered them to raise a statue to him near the temple of Apollo. Herod. l. 4, c. 13; Strab. l. 14; Mar. Tyr. l. 22; Suidas.

ARISTÆAS, a mathematician, surnamed the Elder by Pappus, is said by him to have been intimate with Euclid. Papp. Math. Coll. Præf. in l. 7.

ARISTOBULUS II, the younger son of Alexander Jannæus, took possession of the throne of his elder brother Hircanus, who being defeated retired into privacy. Aristobulus was not, however, allowed to enjoy his kingdom long, for being defeated by Pompey he was sent prisoner to Rome, and afterwards, on being liberated by Cæsar, he was poisoned by some of Pompey's party, A.C. 80. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13.

ARISTOBULUS, the son of Alexander, the son and successor of Aristobulus II, was raised to the priesthood by Herod the Great, but the latter afterwards conceiving a jealousy against him, he was drowned by his order while bathing, within the first year of his priesthood. Joseph. l. 15.

ARISTOBULUS, son of Herod the Great, by Mariamne, shared the fortunes and fate of his brother Alexander. [Vide Alexander]

History of Arles.

Arles was for some time the residence of Constantine the Great. In 411 it was besieged by Constantius, and taken from Constantine the Tyrant; in 466 it was besieged and taken by Exaric, king of the Visigoths; but about 512 it fell into the hands of the French, from whom it was taken by the Saracens, and soon after retaken by Charles Martel, after which it became the capital of a kingdom until the time of the emperor Frederic II, in 1213, when it was converted into a republic, and enjoyed many immunities. In 1481 it was annexed to the French crown.

Ecclesiastical History of Arles.

The church of Arles is said to have been founded by St. Trophimus, who is supposed to have been the same as is mentioned in the Epistles of St. Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 20. Before the revolution it was an archbishop's see, having as suffragans Marseilles, St. Paul-Trois-Châteaux, Toulon, and Orange. Many councils were held here, of which the principal were in 314 by Constantine the Great respecting the bishops of Africa; in 353 by Constantius, in favour of Arius, and against Athanasius; in 813 by Charlemagne, respecting ecclesiastical discipline.

ARLES, in Latin Arulæ, a small town of France, at the foot of the Pyrenees, where a council was held in 1046.

ARLEUX (Geog.) a town of France in the county of Artois, and the modern department of the North, two leagues S. Douay. It was ceded to France by the peace of the Pyrenees, in 1659; and in 1711 the duke of Marlborough got possession of the lines constructed by marshal Villars, near this city.

ARLINGTON, Henry, Earl of (Hist.) second son of sir John Bennet, [vide Bennet] was educated at Oxford, espoused the royal cause during the rebellion, and died in 1685, after serving king Charles II as his minister and negotiator in Spain. He was one of the five ministers who were denominated "The Cabal."

ARLOTTO, Piovano (Biog.) a jester of Florence, who disgraced his profession as a priest by his attempts at wit on sacred subjects. He died in 1483, and after his death a collection was published, with the title 'Faccie, Fabule e Motti, del Piovano Arlotto, Prete Fiorentino,' 8vo. Venice, 1520; 8vo. Florence, 1568.

ARLUNO, Bernardine (Biog.) of Milan, in the 12th, or as some say, the 14th century, wrote a history of his native place.

ARMAGEDDON (Bibl.) Ἀρμαγεδών, a place mentioned in Rev. xvi. 16, probably the same as Megiddo. [Vide Megiddo]

ARMAGH (Geog.) a city of Ulster, and anciently the metropolis of Ireland, is now the capital of the county, 62 m. N. Dublin, lon. 6° 36' W., lat. 54° 21' N. It was an extensive and populous city in the middle centuries, and was celebrated as a place of learning, having, according to the Irish writers, as many as 7000 students at its college; but it was frequently plundered by the Danes, and once destroyed by fire. In 1642 it was also set on fire by sir Phelim O'Neil. The church of Armagh is said to have been founded by St. Patrick, in 455, and was erected into an archbishopric in 1511, the bishop of which is the primate and metropolitan of all Ireland; and the see extends into five counties, namely, Armagh, Derry, Meath, Tyrone, and Louth. Usher, the learned chronologer, held this see during the usurpation of Cromwell.

ARMENIA (Geog.) 'Αρμενία, a large country of Asia, which was divided into Upper and Lower, so called, as is said, from Armenus, one of the Argonauts, and now Turcomania, or Curdistan.

Rivers of Armenia. The principal rivers of Armenia are the Euphrates, Tigris, Araxes, Cyrus, Pharis, Lycus, &c.

Mountains. The principal mountains are the Caucasus, Taurus, Paryadres, Abus, and above all Mons Gordyæus, or Mount Ararat, on which Noah's ark rested.

Towns. The principal towns are Artaxata, now Eschia; Trigranocerta, now Sulthania; Nicopolis, now Gianich; Melitene, now Malatia.

History of Armenia.

This country formerly belonged to the Persians, and afterwards became a Roman province, although it was allowed for some time to have its own kings. On the decline of the Roman empire Armenia was alternately in the hands of the emperors of Constantinople, and of the Saracens, until its entire conquest by the sultan Selim, in 1515, since which time it has been divided between the Turks and the Persians. The Turks have divided Armenia into six pachalics or governments, namely, Erzerum, Diarbekir, Akisker, Kars, Bayazid, and Moosh.

Ecclesiastical History.

It is supposed that the apostle St. Bartholomew preached the gospel in Armenia, the church of which was very flourishing in the fourth century, and was governed by two patriarchs. In 435 a council was held here, touching some heretical books which the Nestorians wished to pass off for orthodox: since that time the church of Armenia has been much distracted by schisms.

Anatomy,' delivered at Surgeon's Hall, Jan. 21, 1767, 4to. 5. 'Memoires de Chirurgie,' &c. 2 vols. 4to. 1768.

ARNAUD, Francis Thomas Marie de Baculard d', a miscellaneous French writer, who wrote 24 vols. of novels, poems, and plays, and died in 1805.

ARNAULD (Hist.) the name of an ancient and noble family of Auvergne, which was distinguished before the end of the 15th century.

ARNAULD, Anthony, was in the service of queen Catharine, of Medicis, and died in 1585.

ARNAULD, Anthony, son of the preceding, was born in 1560, and appointed advocate-general to the queen Catherine de Medicis, in which capacity, after distinguishing himself by his eloquence and his probity, he died in 1619, leaving a small work against the Jesuits, whose recall he wished to prevent, entitled, 'Le Franc et Véritable Discours au Roi sur la Rétablissement qui lui est demandé pour les Jésuites,' 8vo. 1602 and 1610.

ARNAULD, d' Andilli Robert, eldest son of the preceding, was early employed at court in many considerable offices, which he filled with honour to himself. He died in 1674, leaving many devotional works, besides Translations of the Confessions of S. Augustin, of Josephus, of the Lives of the Saints, &c.

ARNAULD, Simon, Marquis de Pomponne, one of the most celebrated ministers of his day, was employed at the early age of 23 on many important negotiations, was appointed ambassador extraordinary in 1665 at the court of Sweden, and died in 1699, after having spent his life in the service of the king.

ARNAULD, Henry (Ecc.) brother of Robert Arnauld, was born at Paris in 1597, elected bishop of Toul after the death of Gourmay, his predecessor; sent to Rome in 1645 on an extraordinary embassy, relative to the disputes between Barberini and Leo; was elected bishop of Angers in 1649, and died in 1692, after having zealously discharged his duty to his diocese.

ARNAULD, Anthony (Biog.) brother of Robert and Henry, and a doctor of the Sorbonne, was born in 1612, and died in 1694, after having been engaged in warm disputes with the Jesuits. A collection of his numerous works was printed at Lausanne, in 1777—1783, in 45 volumes, consisting of controversial writings against the Calvinists and the Jesuits, treatises on the Belles Lettres, and theological dissertations.

ARNAULD, Agnes, sister of the preceding, and abbess of the Port-Royal des Champs, at Paris, wrote two small books, entitled, 'Le Chapelet Secret du Saint Sacrement,' Paris, 1633; and 'L'Image de la Religieuse parfaite et imparfaite,' Paris, 1665; and died in 1671. The first of her works was censured by some of the doctors of the Sorbonne, and approved of by others; and on being referred to the pope, he decided that it should be suppressed. Angelica, the sister of Agnes, had also been abbess of the Port-Royal before her, and four other of her sisters took the veil in the same convent.

ARNAULT (Hist.) the name of an ancient and noble family, many of whose members distinguished themselves in the state. Peter Arnault, the first of whom public mention is made, flourished in 1415.

ARNAULT, Peter, the fourth of this name, who held the seignory of Laborie, was highly esteemed by the three kings, Francis II, Charles IX, and Henry III, to whom he rendered important services.

ARNAULT, Francis, son of the preceding, a captain, was killed at the siege of Peyrat in 1592.

ARNAULT, Alain II, a cavalry officer, threw himself during the civil wars into S. Astier, where he rendered such service by making sorties, as contributed to the raising of the siege. He was reckoned one of the bravest officers in his day.

- ARNAULT, Francis III, who served as a volunteer at the siege of Rochelle, was esteemed for his talent and learning.
- ARNAULT, Francis (Ecc.) an ecclesiastic of the above-mentioned noble family, died in 1667, leaving among his works, one entitled, 'Les Antiquités de Perigord,' which is very scarce.

ARRAGON (Geog.) or Aragon, in the Latin of the middle ages Aragonia, or Arragonia; is supposed with most probability to derive its name from Tarraconensis, one of the ancient divisions of Spain.

Boundaries. It is bounded by the Pyrenees on the N, Navarre and Castile on the W, Valencia on the S, and Catalonia on the E. Its chief town is the celebrated Saragossa.

History. Arragon formed at first only a part of the kingdom of Navarre, bearing the title of a county. Sancho I, a noble Gascon, was count of Arragon in 852; and his descendant Sancho III, surnamed the Great, was king of Navarre, Arragon, and Castille, and at his death, he divided these three kingdoms among his sons, Garcias IV, Ferdinand I, and Ramirus I. To the latter was assigned the kingdom of Arragon, to which his successors added the principality of Catalonia, and the kingdoms of Valentia and Majorca. The kings of Arragon were divided into three races; namely, the first race descended immediately from Ramirus I; the second race was descended from Raimond Berenger, the fourth of this name, who was count of Barcelona, and obtained the crown of Arragon by his marriage with Petronilla, daughter of Ramirus II. The third race was descended from Ferdinand, the son of John I, king of Castille, who was acknowledged king of Arragon in 1412.

Peter III.	1276	Ferdinand V.	1479
Alphonso III.	1284

In this Ferdinand, with his queen Isabella, the crown of Arragon and Castille was united. [Vide Spain] The house of Arragon furnished many other princes besides those who had governed this kingdom; namely, kings of Sicily in the person of Frederic III, of Arragon, and his descendants; kings of Majorca in that of James II, of Arragon, and his descendants; also some dukes of Athens and of Segorbe; counts of Urgel, of Trade, &c.

ARRAN, James Hamilton, first Earl of (Hist.) son of James lord Hamilton. [Vide Hamilton]

ARRAN, James, second Earl of, and duke of Chatellerault, in France, was, when but a very young man, one of the lords who attended king James V, by his special appointment, in his voyage to France; and, at his death in 1542, was, by the unanimous consent of parliament, chosen protector to the young queen Mary, and governor of Scotland, being the second person in the realm, and nearest to succeed to the crown of the same at the decease of the queen without issue.

He afterwards resigned the regency in 1551 into the hands of the queen dowager Mary of Guise; and, after various fluctuations of council, and vicissitudes of fortune, which has made his name so conspicuous in the history of those times, he died in 1555.

ARRAN, Earl of, son of the duke of Chatellerault, aspired to the hand of Mary, queen of Scots; but, being rejected, he lost his senses.

ARRAN, Earl of, James Stewart, obtained the title and estate from James Hamilton at his death in the reign of James VI, king of Scotland; and, after taking an active part in the troubles of the times, and retaining the favour of the king for a long time, he was killed by a cousin of the earl of Morton, the late regent, whom he had accused falsely. Cambd. in Vit. Eliz. et in Britan; Thuan. Hist. l. 83.

ARRAN, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles belonging to the Hamilton family, which was conferred in 1503 on James, third lord Hamilton, by James IV on his return from England in 1503, where he had been to negotiate the marriage between that king and the princess Margaret, eldest daughter of Henry VII. This title is derived from Arran, an island of Scotland, in the Frith of Clyde, to the S. of the isle of Bute, and constituting the principal part of the county of Bute.

ARRAN, Earl of, a title conferred on the Gore family, and derived from the islands of Arran, on the coast of Ireland. Sir Arthur Gore, who was descended from Sir Ralph Gore, the sixth baronet, was advanced in 1758 to the dignities of viscount Sudley, of Castle Gore, and baron Saunders; and in 1762 was created earl of the islands of Arran, in the county of Galway. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Gore, earl of Arran, viscount Sudley, baron Saunders, and a baronet.

Arms. Gules, a fesse between three collars fitchy or.

Crest. On a wreath, a wolf rampant argent.

Supporters. Two horses argent.

Motto. "In hoc signo vinces."

ARRAS, Ben Arras (Biog.) author of a book on the Superiority of the Two Nations, Arabia and Persia.

ARRAS (Geog.) an episcopal town of Artois, in the Low Countries, suffragan of Cambrai, which by Cæsar was called Atrebatum, and by Ptolemy Origiacum. It is seated on the Scarpe, 22 miles W. N. W. Cambrai. Lon. 2° 40' E. lat. 50° 17' N.

History of Arras.

Arras was the capital of Flanders when Charles the Bald, king of France, gave it in dowry to his daughter Judith, who was married to Baldwin, surnamed Iron-arm, in 863. It was afterwards reunited to France, with all Artois, in 1180. Louis XI took this city after the death of the duke of Burgundy, and in 1493 it was delivered to the emperor Maximilian I; but in 1640, it fell into the hands of the French; and when the Spaniards besieged it in 1654, they were compelled to raise the siege after a great loss.

Ecclesiastical History of Arras.

St. Wast, the first bishop of Arras, died in 540; after him Cambrai and Arras had the same prelate under the metropolitan of Rheims. In 1093 the pope Urban II separated these two dioceses, and gave a particular bishop to Arras; and when, in the 16th century, Cambrai was erected into an archbishopric, Arras was placed among the number of its suffragans. Four synods were held in this city; namely, in 1025, by Gerard, bishop of Cambrai and Arras; in 1490, by Peter de Ranchicourt; in 1570, by Francis Richardot; and, lastly, in 1588. *Guichard. Paris, 1735. He was employed by the French court on many missions into the East.

ARVINA, Cornelius A. (Hist.) was created dictator in the prospect of a war with the Samnites, and having obtained a signal victory over this people, he had the honour of a triumph, U. C. 432, A. C. 320. Liv. l. 8, c. 38.

ARUM, Dominic Van (Biog.) a Friesland nobleman and a lawyer, was born in 1579, and died in 1637. His principal works are, 1. 'Discurus Academici de Jure Publico,' 5 vols. 4to. Jen. 1617—1623. 2. 'Discurus Academici ad Auream Bullam Caroli IV,' 4to. Jen. 1617. 3. 'Commentaria de Comitibus Roman. German. Imp.' 4to. Jen. 1630.

ARUNDEL, Edmund, fourth Earl of (Hist.) of the Fitzalan family, [vide Arundel, under Heraldry] being a favourite of king Edward II, and of the Spenser faction, was beheaded by the procurement of Mortimer in 1326.

ARUNDEL, Richard, seventh Earl of Arundel, of the same family, was beheaded in the troublesome reign of Richard II.

ARUNDEL, John, ninth Earl of, lost his life in the wars in France in 13 Henry VI.

ARUNDEL, Sir John, a knight of the ancient family of Arundel, [vide Arundel, under Heraldry] was one of the valiant commanders in France in the reign of Henry VI, who, when the French king sent a puissant army to subdue Aquitaine, had the government of the country, together with the lord Camois and sir John Seymour. They garrisoned towns, and did all that was possible to frustrate the designs of the French.

ARUNDEL, Sir John, grandson of the preceding, was in 1495 made a knight of the Bath, at the creation of the duke of York, and for his valour at the siege of Terouen and Tournay, and at the battle that ensued, was made knight banneret in 1514 in 5 Henry VIII.

ARUNDEL, William, thirteenth and last Earl of, of the Fitzalan family, aspired to the hand of queen Elizabeth at the commencement of her reign. He was afterwards a favourer of the duke of Norfolk's marriage with queen Mary, for which he suffered imprisonment in 14 Eliz.

ARUNDEL, Sir Thomas, second son of Sir John Arundel, before-mentioned, was beheaded in 1552, on a charge of conspiring with Edward, duke of Somerset, the murder of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland.

ARUNDEL, Sir Thomas, grandson of the preceding, and first lord Arundel of Wardour, served as a volunteer in the imperial army in Hungary against the Turks, and in an engagement took their standard with his own hands, on which account Rudolph II, emperor of Germany, created him count of the sacred Roman empire. He afterwards distinguished himself on several other occasions, and was for his merits raised by James I to the dignity of the English peerage, [vide Arundel, under Heraldry] and died with the surname of Valiant in 1639, aged 79.

ARUNDEL, Thomas, second Baron Arundel, raised at his own expense a regiment of horse, for the service of king Charles I, and died from the wounds he had received on the field of battle, in his majesty's garrison at Oxford. His lady, Blanch, fifth daughter of Edward Somerset, earl of Worcester, distinguished herself no less than her lord in the same cause, by bravely defending Wardour Castle for nine days, with a few men, against the rebel forces under sir Edward Hungerford and Edmund Ludlow. She then delivered it up on honourable terms, which they broke; but were soon dislodged by lord Arundel, who ordered a mine to be sprung under his own castle, and thus sacrificed a noble structure to his loyalty.

ARUNDEL, Henry, third Lord Arundel, was, in 1678, with William Herbert, earl of Powis; William Howard, viscount Stafford; William, lord Petre; and John, lord Bellasis, committed to the Tower upon the information of the infamous Titus Oates; who were afterwards impeached by the House of Commons for high crimes and misdemeanours, but were never brought to trial. He continued in confinement till 1683, but on king James II's accession to the throne, in 1685, was sworn of his privy council, and constituted lord keeper of the privy seal, &c.

ARUNDEL, Thomas, second son of the fourth lord Arundel, was killed at the battle of the Boyne, as he was fighting for king James II.

ARUNDEL, Philip Howard, Earl of, son of the fourth duke of Norfolk, fell under the suspicion of practising, in imitation of his father, against the government, in favour of queen Mary, and being taken prisoner when he was attempting to make his escape, he was tried on a charge of high treason, found guilty, and condemned to die; but sentence not being executed upon him, he died in prison in 1595.

ARUNDEL, Thomas, Earl of, only son of the preceding, came into favour with James I, by whom, in 1621, he was constituted earl-marshal of England for life, and after having been also in the service and favour of Charles I, he died in 1646, in the 55th year of his age. He is well known by the Parian or Arundelian marbles which he discovered, and which were presented by his grandson, the sixth duke of Norfolk, to the University of Oxford. Prideaux, Chandler, and Matuire, published an account of this collection under the title of 'Marmora Oxoniensia.'

ARUNDEL, Henry Frederic, Earl of, the eldest surviving son of the preceding, voted against the bill of attainder of Thomas, earl of Strafford, and was steady in his adherence to the king, for whom he was a sufferer until his death in 1652.

ARUNDEL, Thomas (Ecc.) archbishop of Canterbury in the reigns of Richard II, Henry IV, and Henry V, was the brother of Richard Fitzalan, earl of Arundel, who was beheaded. [Vide Arundel, under History] He was exiled in the reign of Richard, but restored to his dignity on the accession of Henry IV, and died in 1413, after having zealously maintained the rights and authority of the Romish church.

ARUNDEL (Her.) an ancient family in the west of England, where Roger de Arundel, according to Domesday book, was possessor of 20 lordships in the county of Somerset. Sir Thomas Arundel above-mentioned, first lord Arundel, was created a baron of England in the reign of James I, in 1603, under the title of lord Arundel of Wardour. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Sable six swallows, three, two, and one, argent, besides the quarterings, with the illustrious families of Chidocke, Dynham, Howard, Brotherton, Warren, and Moubray.

Crest. On a wreath a wolf passant argent.

Supporters. On the dexter side a lion guardant ermine, i. e. yellow, powdered with black, ducally crowned or.

On the sinister, an owl argent, with wings disclosed or, crowned as the dexter.

Motto. "Deo data."

ARUNDEL, Lord Arundel of Trerice, a title conferred first on Richard Arundel, in 1664, which became extinct in 1768, in the person of the fourth peer, John, Lord Arundel, his great grandson.

ARUNDEL, Earl of, a title belonging to the Fitzalan family, which came by inheritance in 1243 to John Fitzalan, Lord Fitzalan of Clun, in Shropshire, who in right of his mother had, in 28 Hen. III, the castle of Arundel assigned to him as his share of his mother's inheritance; all possessors of that castle and honour being earls thereof, without any other creation. The title became extinct in that family in 1579, in the person of William, thirteenth earl of Arundel, who died without issue male. It afterwards came into the family of Howard, duke of Norfolk, by the marriage of the fourth duke with Mary, daughter and heir of Henry Fitzalan, earl of Arundel.

ARUNDEL, Mary (Biog.) wife to Henry Howard, earl of Arundel in the 16th century, is known by her translation of the Wise Sayings, &c. of Alexander Severus, and also of other things, from Plato, Seneca, &c.

ARUNS (Myth.) a soldier who slew Camilla, and was killed by Diana with a dart. Virg. Æn. l. 11, v. 759.

ARUNS (Hist.) a grandson of Tarquin the Elder, and brother of Tarquin the Proud, was murdered by his wife Tullia, the daughter of Servius Tullius, that she might marry Tarquin. Dionys. Hal. 4; Liv. 1. 1, 2.

ASCALAPHUS (Myth.) Ἀσκάλαφος, a son of Mars, by Astyoche. Hom. Il. 1. 2, v. 13.

ASCALAPHUS, a son of Acheron and Orpheus, was changed by Proserpine into an owl. Ovid. Met. 1. 5.

ASCALON (Geog.) Ασκαλὼν, the town of Palestine, which in Scripture is written Askelon, [vide Askelon] is situated on the sea coast, 14 m. N. Gaza, and 30 S. W. Jerusalem, lon. 34° 37' E., lat. 31° 38' N. It was taken from the Assyrians by the Persians, and afterwards fell successively into the hands of Alexander the Great, Ptolemy, and Antiochus Magnus; but during the civil wars between Antiochus Epiphanes and his brother Philopater it became independent, until it was reduced to a part of the Roman empire. It was frequently taken by the Saracens, and suffered much during the crusades. Baldwin, king of Jerusalem, took it after a siege of five or six months, in 1153 or 1154, at which time it was erected into an episcopal town. But falling at length into the hands of the Turks, it was almost entirely destroyed, and is now an insignificant place, which they occupy for the purpose of opposing the inroads of the Arabians.

ASCALON (Numis.) struck many coins or medals at different times; some while it was ἑξονόμοτος, or independent, and some in honour of Alexander the Great, but still more in honour of the Roman emperors Augustus, Tiberius, Claudius, Nero, Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, Sept. Severus, Heliogabalus, and Alex. Severus, bearing, as in the annexed cut, the figure of a female with a turreted head, representing the genius of the city, and supposed by some to be Astarte; she stands on the prow of a ship, and near her is a trident, to denote its maritime situation; the reed in her left hand is a symbol of the lake near to Ascalon, into which Dercetus threw herself, according to fabulous history, after bringing forth a girl, named Semiramis, to whom divine honours were paid, as denoted by the altar, on some medals; the figure of the dove is emblematical of this Semiramis, who, when exposed by her mother, is said to have been fed with milk and cheese by doves. The inhabitants of Ascalon also used the type of an onion, to denote their abundance in that part, besides the figures of Jupiter and Hercules, &c. on their most ancient medals. This city first employed the æra of the Seleucida, which they exchanged for a new epocha, dated from the period when they liberated themselves from the dominion of the Syrian kings, A. C. 103, U. C. 650; hence ΓΡ. ΓΙΡ. ΑΑΡ. &c. 103, 113, 131, &c. on medals of Augustus, Tiberius, &c.: the inscriptions ΑΣ. ΑΣΚΑΛΩ. ΑΣΚΑΛΙ. ΑΣΚΑΛΟ. ΑΣΣΑΛΩΝΙΤΩΝ; also, on a medal of Adrian, ΑΣΚΑΛΩΝΕΙΤ. ΜΕΤΡ. which is interpreted Metropolis by some, but by others, Metrodorus, the name of a magistrate.

ASCANAXES (Hist.) a son of Gomer. [Vide Ashkenaz]
ASCANIA (Geog.) an ancient fortress in Lower Saxony, which was the capital of the country that gave its name to the princes of Anhalt.

ASCANIUS (Hist.) also called Iulus, a son of Æneas by Creusa, who went with his father into Italy, where his descendants reigned for 420 years. According to Dionysius Halicarnassus, the son of Æneas by Lavinia, was also called Ascanius. Dionys. l. 1; Liv. l. 1; Virg. Æn. l. 1.

ASCANIUS, the name of a German family descended, as some say, from Ashkenaz, one of the grandsons of Japhet; but with more probability it owes its origin to Ascanius, who emigrated from Bithynia into Germany; from whom the princes of Anhalt trace their descent.

ASCANIUS, Maria Sforza, vide Sforza.

ASCARIC (Hist.) a Gaul, who attempted to throw off the Roman yoke, but, being defeated by Constantine, was devoured by dogs. Eutrop. l. 1; Euseb. in Vit. Constant.

ASCELINUS (Biog.) one of the first writers of the 11th century, who combated the errors of Berenger.

ASCH, George Thomas, Baron d' (Biog.) a Russian physician, was born at Petersburg in 1729, and died in 1807. He is known more as the patron of learning than as a writer, but in this character he took a considerable part in the Russian Pharmacopœia, 4to. Petersburg, 1778.

ASCHAM, Anthony (Hist.) one of Cromwell's friends and adherents, was assassinated with his interpreter by six exiled royalists in Spain, where he had been sent on a mission from England in 1650. He wrote 'A Discourse on the Revolutions and Confusions of Governments,' 8vo. 1648.

ASCHAM, Roger (Biog.) an English scholar, was born in 1515, and died in 1568. He was sent in 1530 to St. John's college, Cambridge, and after taking his degrees in 1534 and 1536, was employed as preceptor to Queen Elizabeth, by whom he was patronized, as he had been before by king Edward and Queen Mary. The only works he published were, 1. 'Toxophilus, or the School of Shooting, in two Books,' 4to. London 1545, 1571, and 1589. 2. 'A Report and Discourse, written by Roger Ascham, of the Affairs and State of Germany,' &c. London, printed by John Daye, dwelling over Aldgate. Cum gratia et privilegio Regie Majestatis per decennium, without a date. After his death were published. 3. 'The Schoolmaster, or a Plain and Perfitte Way of Teaching Children to understand, write, and speak the Latin Tongue,' &c. by Roger Ascham, anno 1570, at London, printed by John Daye, dwelling over Aldgate, inscribed by Margaret, his widow, to Sir William Cecil, principal secretary of state. It was reprinted by Daye, 1571; by Jeffes, 1589; and by Upton, 1711. 4. 'Apologia Doct. Viri R. A. pro Cœna Dominica contra Missum et ejus Prestigias,' 8vo. London, 1577. Ascham's Epistles were published by Mr. Grant, master of Westminster school, in 1576, 1577, 1578, and 1590; there were also two editions at Hanau, 1602 and 1610; and one at Nuremberg, 1611. The last and best edition is that published by Mr. Elstob, Oxford, 1700. Ascham's English works were published by the Rev. James Bennett, 4to. 1767; to which Dr. Johnson added a life that has since been inserted in his works.

ASCHAM, Anthony, author of 'Tracts on Astrology, and on the Properties of Herbs gathered in 1550,' was a physician, and also an ecclesiastic.

ASCIARI (Biog.) a musselman doctor, and chief of the Ascharians, who were particularly opposed to the Hanbalites. The latter maintained a particular providence, but the former were absolute predestinarians. Aschari died at Bagdad in 940.

ASIA (Myth.) Ἀσίη, wife of Prometheus, who gave name to Asia, according to Herodotus. Herod. l. 4, c. 45.

ASIA (Geog.) one of the three quarters of the ancient world, and of the four quarters of the modern; received its name from Asia, according to Herodotus; or more probably from the Hebrew אַשּׁוּר.

Boundaries and Extent. Asia is bounded by the ocean on the North, East, and South. It is bounded on the N. by the Frozen Ocean, on the E. by the Pacific Ocean, and on the S. by the Indian Ocean. On the W. it is separated from Africa by the Red Sea, from the Straits of Babelmandel to the Isthmus of Suez; and it is separated from Europe by the Archipelago, the Straits of Gallipoli, the Euxine or Black Sea, the Sea of Marmora, and the Straits of Constantinople, &c. Its greatest length from the Western shores of Natolia to East Cape, in Siberia, is about 7583 miles; and its greatest breadth from Cape Kerven Vostochnir, in the Frozen Ocean to the Southern point of Malacca, is upwards of 5000 miles.

Division. Asia was divided by the ancients into Asia Minor and Asia Major, which were separated by Mount Taurus. Asia Minor comprehended Mysia, Phrygia, Lydia, Caria, Doris, Æolis, Ionia, and the Island of Rhodes; Asia Major comprehended Sarmatia, Scythia, India, Persia, Arabia, Syria, Armenia, Colchis, Iberia, Albania, Cappadocia, Cilicia, Galatia, Pontus, Bithynia, Pamphylia, Lycia, the Island of Cyprus, &c. Modern Asia is divided into five parts, namely, the Indies, with the adjacent parts, China, Tartary, Persia, and the Turkish Empire.

Seas, Lakes, and Rivers. The principal seas are the Caspian Sea, the China Sea, Yellow Sea, the Sea of Aral, and of Ochotsk, &c.; the lakes and rivers are Barkal, the Ganges, Indus, Euphrates, &c.; the Gulf of Siam, the Gulf of Tonquin, &c.

Islands. The most noted islands amongst the ancients were the Islands of Samos, Scio, Mytelene, Rhodes, Cos, and Cyprus; those among the moderns are Ceylon, Borneo, the Philippines, the Celebes, the Islands of Japan, &c.

Mountains, &c. The most celebrated mountains were Mount Taurus, and Caucasus, &c.

Towns. The principal towns known to the ancients and moderns are Jerusalem, Smyrna, Ephesus, Tarsus, Damascus, Casarea, Aleppo, Mecca, &c.

History. Asia was successively governed by the Assyrians, Medes, Persians, and Greeks; but the regions of India and China were but little known even to Alexander, or any of the conquerors of the ancient world. On the decline of these empires, great part of Asia submitted to the Romans, till at length the Saracens arose and founded a still larger empire, not only throughout Asia, but also in Africa, and part of Europe. The Saracens were obliged to yield to the Turks after the death of Tamerlane, who now possess the middle regions of Asia.

Ecclesiastical History. This quarter of the globe has been the scene of the most important transactions which concern the human race, having witnessed the creation, the fall, and finally the redemption of man by the life and death of our Saviour; but although Christianity was first introduced into this part of the world, it has been prevented from making any considerable spread by the prevalence of idolatry, which exists here in its grossest form.

ASIA Minor, one of the ancient divisions of Asia, is now known by the name of Natalia.

ASIA (Numis.) or that part of it which formed a consular province of the Romans, was represented on some medals under the figure of a female habited in a tunic, and having her right foot on the prow of a ship, in her right hand an aversorium, and in her left a rudder, &c.; inscription, ASIA, to which is added on medals of Adrian and Antoninus Pius, COS. II. or III. S. C. sometimes ASIA RECEPTA, or SUBACTA, put for the eastern part of the empire.

ASIATICUS (Hist.) the surname of L. Scipio, so called because he was the conqueror of Antiochus.

ASIATICUS, a freedman of Vitellius, who was honoured with the equestrian rank, and afterwards crucified by Mucianus, a general of Vespasian. Tac. Hist. l. 2, v. 4.

ASIATICUM, vide Valerius.

ASIEL (Bibl.) אֲשֵׁל, father of Seraiah. 1 Chron. iv. 35.

ASILAS (Myth.) an augur, who assisted Æneas against Turnus. Virg. Æn. l. 9.

ASINA (Hist.) a surname given to some of the Cornelian family, because they offered an ass loaded with money as a surety. Macrob. Sat. l. 1, c. 6.

ASINARI, Frederic (Hist.) count de Camerano, a nobleman of Asti, in Piedmont, in the 16th century, was sent by the Duke of Savoy to assist Maximilian II. and distinguished himself against Soliman, the sultan. He was also a poet, and wrote many sonnets, which have been published at different times; besides some tragedies, which remain in MS. in the library of Turin.

ASINARUS (Geog.) Ἀσινάρος, or Ἀσινάριος, a river of Sicily, now Falconara, near which the Athenian generals Nicias and Demosthenes were defeated. Thucyd. l. 7, c. 84; Diodor. l. 13; Plut. in Nic.

ASINIUS POLLIO (Hist.) an orator and historian, who rose from obscurity to the dignity of the consulship, which he held U. C. 714, A. C. 40. He triumphed over the Dalmatians, and after the death of Cæsar, rendered great service to M. Antony, which did not prevent him from being a great favourite with Augustus. He wrote a History in 18 books, besides Orations and Tragedies, and was celebrated by the verses of Virgil and Horace, who were under his patronage. Asinius died at Fiesato, at the age of 80. Cic. ad Famil. l. 10, ep. 33; Virg. Eclog. 4; Hor. l. 2, od. 1; Vell. Pater. l. 2; Plin. l. 7, c. 30; Quintil. l. 6, &c.; Appian. Civil. l. 5; Euseb.

ASINIUS GALLUS, son of Asinius Pollio, was consul with M. Censorinus, U. C. 746, A. C. 8. He afterwards married Vipsania, the repudiated wife of Tiberius, which causing the displeasure of the emperor, he starved himself to death, either voluntarily or by the order of the latter. He wrote a Comparison between his father and Cicero, in which he gives the preference to the former, besides some Epigrams and Poems. Tacit. Annal. l. 1 and 5; Plin. l. 7, ep. 4; Dio. 58.

ASINIUS MARCELLUS, grandson of Asinius Pollio, was accused of some misdemeanours, but afterwards acquitted. Tacit. Annal. l. 14.

ASSOS (Bibl.) Ἀσσος, a maritime town of Mysia, whither St. Paul went by sea from Troas. Acts xx. 13. It was the native place of the stoic philosopher Cleanthes, which Pliny calls Apollonia. Strab. l. 13; Plin. l. 2.

ASSOUCI, Charles Cuypeau Sieur d' (Biog.) called the Ape of Scarron, was born at Paris in 1604, and, after a dissolute and vagrant life, died in 1679. He wrote his adventures in a style of buffoonery, 3 vols. 12mo. 1678; and also some poems, which were collected in 3 vols. 12mo. 1678.

ASSYRIA (Geog.) Ἀσσυρία, a large country of Asia; derives its name from Ashur, its first planter.

Boundaries and Extent. Assyria was bounded, according to Ptolemy, by part of Armenia and Mount Niphates on the N.; by the Tigris on the W.; by Susiana on the S.; and by part of Media, and the mountains Choatra and Zagros on the E.; but Strabo allows it a greater extent, so as to comprehend Syria, Mesopotamia, Babylonia, and Assyria properly so called.

Division. It was divided by Ptolemy into the provinces of Adiabene, Calachene, Arrapachites, Arbelitus, Apolloniatis, Sittacene, and Chalonitis; but is at present divided between the Turks and the Persians. That part which the grand seignior retains, which is the least, is now called Arserum, and comprehends Beglerbey and the eastern part of Mozuque, beyond the Tigris. The other part, which the Persians possess, is re-united to the different Persian provinces.

Towns. Its principal towns were Ctesiphon, Ninevah, Arbela, Arropa, Sambata, Gurama, Sittacene, &c.

History. Assyria, which stands the foremost in profane history, is in Scripture the second most ancient kingdom after Babylon. The chronology and succession of its kings has given rise to much dispute and investigation among the learned, of which the reader may inform himself by consulting the authorities annexed to this article. The following list is taken from Eusebius, who followed Julius Africanus, Castor, Cephalion, and Thallus. He divides their kings into three dynasties, the first of which he calls the Chaldean kings, as follow:

Kings.	Reign.
Evechous, or Nimrod	6 years.
Chomasbole	7
Porus	35
Nechobes	43
Abius	48
Oniballus	40
Xinxirus	45

Total 224

ASS

The second dynasty he calls Arabian kings, who were as follow:

Kings.	Reign.
Mordocentes	45 years.
Sisimadaehus	28
Gabius	37
Parannus	40
Nabonnades	25
6 Unknown	41

Total 216

The Arabians being expelled the kingdom, he gives the third dynasty of Assyrian kings, properly so called, which were as follow:

Kings.	A. M.	A. C.
Belus	1879	2161
Ninus	1929	2106
Semiramis	1981	2054
Ninyas	2023	2012
Arius	2061	1974
Amalius	2091	1944
Xerxes	2131	1904
Armamithres	2161	1874
Belochus	2199	1836
Baleus	2234	1801
Sethos	2286	1749
Mamylus	2318	1717
Aschalius	2348	1687
Spherus	2376	1659
Mamylus	2398	1637
Spartheus	2428	1607
Ascatades	2458	1577
Amyntus	2496	1539
Belochus II	2541	1494
Belatorus	2566	1469
Lamprades	2596	1439
Sosares	2626	1409
Lampracs	2646	1389
Tanyas	2676	1359
Sosarmes	2716	1319
Mithrens	2738	1297
Tautanes	2765	1270
Tenteus	2797	1238
Thineus	2841	1194
Dereylus	2871	1164
Euparnes	2911	1124
Laosthenes	2949	1086
Pyrtiades	2994	1041
Ophrateus	3024	1011
Epacherus	3045	990
Acraganus	3097	938
Sardanapalus	3139	896

The correctness of the above list may justly be questioned, as it rests on no better authority than that of Ctesias, but we learn from Scripture that Nimrod was the first who reigned in that part of the world, which was called Assyria, Gen. x.; but of his successors no mention is made. His kingdom was in all probability divided into smaller portions, as Amraphel is said to have reigned in Babylon when Abraham was about 90 years old, Gen. xiv, which was A. M. 2119, A. C. 1914. Of other kings little is known until A. M. 2806, A. C. 1229, when Semiramis laid the foundations of the mighty empire of the Assyrians, whose successors are unknown until Phul, who reigned at Nineveh at the same time as Manchem reigned over Israel at Samaria, A. M. 3270, A. C. 765, 2 Kings xv.

The following is a list of the successors of Phul, according to the canon of Scripture and profane authors:

Tiglathpilesar, or Thelylathphalnasar.
Salmananeser.
Sennacherib.
Esarhaddon.
Nebuchadnezzar, or Saosduchius.
Chynaladanus, or Sarac.

Chynaladanus, who is better known in profane history by the name of Sardanapalus, was the last king of Assyria, who in a fit of despair set fire to his own palace, and consumed himself with all his possessions. The empire of Assyria was henceforth divided between the Medes and the Babylonians, by whom it was destroyed. According to Eusebius it flourished 1240 years; according to Justin 1300; but according to Herodotus 5 or 600, which is most conformable to Scripture.

Authors who have written on Assyria and the Assyrian Empire.

Herodotus, Xenophon, Polybius, Scylax, Diodorus, Strabo, Mela, Dionysius Periegetes, Pliny, Agatharcidas, Ptolemy, Q. Curtius, Arrian, Eusebius, Isidor, Bochart, Vossius, Usher, Petavius, Riccioli, Selden, Newton, Marsham, Culmer, Prideaux, &c.

ASSYRIUS (Geog.) the Gentile name for the inhabitants, &c. of Assyria, which was also applied to what was Phœnician and Tyrian.

Alba nec Assyria fœcetur lana veneno.

The term Assyrian was likewise synonymous with Syrian. Macrobi. Sat. l. 1, c. 27.

ASTA (Geog.) a town of the Turditani, in Spain, otherwise called Regia, now Xeres; also a town of Liguria, referred to by Claudian. Plin. l. 3; Claud. de Cons. Honor. l. 6; Paul Diacon. De Reb. Longobard. l. 4, c. 42.

ASTACES (Hist.) a governor of Darius, who is called by Arrian Mazaces.

ASTALLI (Ecc.) three cardinals of that name, who were of a noble family at Rome.

ASTALLI, Astald, was created cardinal by Celestin II, in 1144, and died under Alexander III, leaving a high reputation as a lover of peace and good order.

ASTALLI, Camillus, was created cardinal by Innocent X, in 1650; but was afterwards degraded for his political intrigues with the Spanish ambassador. He retired to his bishopric of Catana in Sicily, where he died in 1663.

ASTAPA (Geog.) a town of Hispania Bœtica, now Estepa. The inhabitants, called Astapenses, threw themselves, with their wives and children, into the flames, that they might not fall into the hands of the Romans. Liv. l. 28, c. 24.

ASTAROTH (Bibl.) אַסְתָּרוֹת, or Astaroth Carnaim, a city beyond Jordan, six miles from Adraa.

ASTAROTH, or Astarte, a Syrian goddess, supposed to be the moon; or Ashteroth, the queen of heaven, among the Hebrews; Isis, among the Egyptians; Alitta, among the Arabians; Melitta, among the Assyrians and Persians; Diana, among the Greeks; Baal and Astaroth, in the Holy Scriptures, where she is also called a goddess of the Sidonians. By Cicero she is supposed to be Venus. Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 3; Lucian. de Dea Syr.; Tertull. in Apol. l. 24, c. 3; Suidas; Bochart. Geog. Sa. p. 781; Selden de Diis Syr.

ASTARTE (Numis.) this goddess is represented on medals in a diversity of forms, sometimes in a long habit, and sometimes in a short one; holding a long stick; having her head crowned with rays, or with a battlement, or a victory, &c. On a medal of Cæsarea Palestina she is represented as in the annexed figure, in a short habit, crowned with battlements, holding the head of Osiris in her right hand, and a staff in her left, inscription COLonia Prima Felix AUGusta Flavia Commodiana, &c. [Vide Cæsarea]

ASTE, Marcellus (Ecc.) was created cardinal by pope Innocent XII, in 1699, after having acted as nuncio in Switzerland; and died bishop of Ancona in 1707.

ASTELL, Mary (Biog.) a lady of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, was born about 1668, and died in 1731. This lady, who was distinguished for her literary attainments, was acquainted with the most learned men of the age, as Atterbury, Dodwell, Norris, Hicks, and spent her life in severe study, by which she made herself familiar with Xenophon, Plato, Cicero, and other writers of antiquity. She wrote, 1. 'A Serious Proposal to the Ladies for the Advancement of their True and Greatest Interests;' and some time after a second part under the same title, with this addition, 'wherein a Method is offered for the Improvement of their Minds,' published in 1696. The object of this work was to recommend the formation of a society among ladies who were disposed for retirement and study to live together under one establishment; and the plan at first met the approbation, as it is said, of the queen so much that she would have given 10,000*l.* towards carrying it into effect, if bishop Burnet had not represented it to her as a dangerous imitation and encouragement of nunneries. 2. 'An Essay in Defence of the Female Sex, in a Letter to a Lady; written by a Lady.' 3. 'Reflections on Marriage,' 1700; and a second edition in 1705. 4. 'Moderation truly stated,' in answer to Dr. d'Avenant's 'Moderation a Virtue.' 5. 'An Impartial Inquiry into the Causes of Rebellion and Civil Wars in this Kingdom,' an Examination of Dr. Kennet's Sermon, Jan. 30, 1703-4. 6. 'A Fair Way with Dissenters and their Patrons,' &c. 1704. 7. 'The Christian Religion, as practised by a Daughter of the Church of England,' 1705. 8. 'Six Familiar Essays upon Marriage, Crosses in Love, and Friendship,' 1706. 8. 'Bart'my Fair, or an Inquiry after Wit,' 1700, occasioned by colonel Hunter's Letter on Enthusiasm; it was reprinted in 1722 without the words 'Bart'my Fair.'

ASTER (Hist.) a citizen of Olynthus, who shot an arrow at Philip, king of Macedon, while he was besieging the town of Methon, with these words, "For Philip's right eye." The arrow having reached its aim, was shot back with this inscription, "If Philip take the town he will hang up Aster." The king kept his word. Plut. in Philip; Lucian. de Hist. Scrib.

ASTERIA (Myth.) Ἀστέρη, a daughter of Cœlus, the son of Titan, was changed by Jupiter into a quail. Hesiod. Theog. v. 136; Apollod. l. 1; Ovid. Met. l. 6.

ASTIOCHUS (Hist.) vide Astyochus.

ASTLE, Thomas (Biog.) an English antiquary of Staffordshire, died in 1803, after having been employed first as chief clerk, and afterwards as keeper of the record office, in which capacity he had been indefatigable in his antiquarian researches, particularly in decyphering old records. His principal work was his 'Origin and Progress of Writing,' besides which he contributed many articles to the Archæologia, and wrote a 'Preface and Index to the Harleian Collection of MSS.' published in 1763.

ASTLEY, Thomas, Lord (Hist.) was killed in 1264 at Evesham in the baron's wars.

ASTLEY, Sir Jacob, of the same family, was a distinguished knight in the time of Charles I.; who after having seen much service abroad, rendered considerable assistance to his sovereign in the time of the rebellion, for which he was elevated to the peerage.

ASTLEY, Francis, son of sir Edward Astley, was killed in the engagement with La Belle Poule off the isle of Bass, in 1778.

ASTLEY (Hier.) the name of an ancient family in Warwickshire, who were barons in the third century. [Vide Astley under History] Sir Jacob Astley, a descendant of this family, was created a baron by the title of lord Astley, of Reading, which title became extinct in the third generation in 1688. Sir Isaac Astley, second son of Thomas Astley, who was the elder brother of lord Astley, was created a baronet in 1641. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Azure, a cinque-foil ermine, within a border engrailed or.

Crest. On a chapeau gules, lined ermine, a demi-pillar gules, environed with a ducal coronet or, out of which issues a plume of feathers argent.

ASTLEY, John (Biog.) a painter, who succeeded well in portrait painting, but gave up his profession on marrying a rich widow, by which he became independent. He died in 1787.

ASTON, Sir John (Hist.) a knight of the Bath in the reign of Henry VIII. [vide Aston under Heraldry], distinguished himself at the siege of Tournonne and Tournay, as also at the battle of the Spurs in 1513, when, for his conduct and bravery, he was made a knight banneret in the open field.

ASTON, Walter, Lord, was sent by James I into Spain with John Digby, earl of Bristol, to negotiate a marriage between Charles, prince of Wales, and the eldest daughter of the crown, for which he was raised to the dignity of the peerage.

ASTON, Walter, second lord, son of the preceding, was in the service of king Charles I during the grand rebellion, and acted, with Sir Thomas Hildesley, as governor of Litchfield during the siege of that place. They held out by the request of the king until the surrender of Oxford: after which lord Aston lived in retirement till the restoration.

ASTON, Sir Arthur, second son of Sir Thomas Aston, in Cheshire, was also in the service of Charles I, to whom he rendered great assistance at the battle of Edge-hill, where, at the head of the dragoons, he three times repulsed the curl of Essex. He was appointed governor of Reading, and afterwards of Oxford; and, on the king's death, he went into Ireland, where he defended Drogheda against the rebels; but the town being at length compelled to surrender to Cromwell, his brains were, by the order of the latter, dashed out with the wooden stump which he used for a leg.

ASTON, Sir Thomas, son of John Aston, in Cheshire, Esq. was one of the firmest loyalists, who supported the cause of Charles I against his rebellious subjects. He raised a party of horse for his majesty's service, but was defeated near Nantwich in 1642, and died of his wounds in 1645. He supported the royal cause by his pen as well as his sword, leaving among his works, 1. 'A Remonstrance against Presbytery,' 4to. London, 1641. 2. 'A Short Survey of the Presbyterian Discipline.' 3. 'A Brief Review of the Institution, Succession, and Jurisdiction of the Ancient and Venerable Order of Bishops.' These two last were printed with the 'Remonstrance.' 4. 'A Collection of Sundry Petitions presented to the King and Parliament,' 4to. 1642.

ASTON (Hier.) a very ancient family, of English extraction, that has been distinguished for worth and valour from the earliest period. Ralph de Acton, in the county of Stafford, was an ancestor of this family; to whose son Robert, in the time of Henry III in 1260, Roger de Morland, bishop of Litchfield and Coventry, gave the keeping of the game, and a seat in the manor of Haywood, both in that county. His son, sir John, was a knight of the shire in the 7th of Edward III, and his posterity were sheriffs for the county for several generations. In the reign of Henry VII, sir John Aston, of whom mention has been made under the head of History, was made K. B. at the marriage of prince Arthur, the king's eldest son; and in the reign of James I, sir Walter Aston was created first a baronet in 1611, and afterwards a peer in 1627 by the title of lord Aston, of Forfar, in the county of Forfar. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Crest. A bull's head couped or, armed argent, the tips of the horns sable.

Supporters. Two Roman knights armed proper, their faces, hands, and knees bare, having round bucklers on their exterior arms, their scabbards sable, sword-hilts and chapes or.

Other branches of this family were created baronets, which are now extinct, as sir Arthur Aston and sir Thomas Aston mentioned under History.

ASTORGA (Geog.) a very ancient town of Leon, in Spain, called by the Romans Asturica Augusta, which is a bishop's see, suffragan of Compostella, and was a marquisate belonging to the house of Osorio. It is well fortified, and is seated in a plain on the river Tueria, 25 miles S. W. Leon. Lon. 5° 32' W. lat. 42° 22' N. In 1812 the French, who had been previously in possession of Astorga, were besieged therein by the Spaniards, to whom they surrendered the town.

ASTORI, John Anthony (Biog.) an antiquary of Venice, was born in 1672, and died in 1743. His works are, 1. 'Commentariolum in Antiquum Alamanis Poetæ Laconis Monumentum,' fol. Venet. 1697; reprinted in the 'Galleria di Minerva;' and also by Sallengre in the 'Novus Thesaurus Antiquitatum Romanarum,' fol. Hag. 1718. 2. 'De Deo Brotonte Epistola;' also reprinted in the above collections. 3. Letters and Dissertations on Coins, &c. 4. 'Mantui, Tragedia Sacra musice recitanda,' Venet. 1718. 5. 'Supplices, Tragedia Sacra,' 1713; besides many lesser pieces in Greek, Latin, and Italian.

ASTRÆA (Myth.) Ἀσπάλη, a daughter of Astræus, king of Arcadia, or, according to Hesiod, of Jupiter and Thetis. She was called Justice, of which she was the goddess, and left the earth in the iron age, and was placed among the constellations under the name of Virgo, or Erigone.

ASTURIAS (Geog.) or Las Asturias, a province of Spain, 120 miles long, and 45 broad, bounded on the E. by Biscay, on the S. by Old Castile and Leon, on the W. by Galicia, and on the N. by the Atlantic.

Division. It is divided into two parts, Asturia d'Oviedo, and Asturia de Santillana, so named from their chief towns.

History. Asturia, which was a distinguished place in the time of the Romans [vide Astures], was, in subsequent ages, the scene of the most interesting events. After king Roderic had been defeated in 718 by the Saracens, and almost all his army destroyed at the disastrous battle of Xeres, the mountains of Asturia afforded a refuge to the fugitives, who, under the conduct of prince Pelayo, or Pelagius, gave a signal defeat to the infidels. He then founded a new kingdom, where he and his successors reigned until the time of Ferdinand I in 1039, taking the title of kings of Leon and Asturias. It has since become a principality annexed to the crown, which belongs to the eldest son of the king, who is entitled Prince of Asturias. The first who took this title was the infant Don Henriquez, son of king John I, of Castile, in 1388. Marian. Hist. Hisp. l. 7; Merul. Descript. Hispan. &c.

ATABALIPA (Hist.) the king of Peru at the time of its discovery by Pizarro, who, having got this prince into his power, strangled him in violation of his pledge in 1533. [Vide Plate V] Garcilass. de la Veg. Hist. del Peru; Herrera. &c.

ATABEK (Hist.) a Turkish word for prince, which was applied in a particular manner to the governors of provinces of the house of the Selgiucides, who made themselves independent princes; as the Atabekian Frnk, i. e. Atabeks of Irak, forming the first dynasty, who began to reign in the year of the Hegira 521, A. D. 1131. Of these there were eight princes; namely, Omadeddin Zenghiki, son of A. Ksancur; A. Noureddin Mahmoud, his son; Saleh, his son; Ezzeddin Massoud, his cousin; Noureddin Arslan Schah, his son; Malek al Caher Ezzeddin Massoud, his son; Nassareddin Mahmoud, his son. The next dynasty was the Atabekian Adherbigian, or the Atabeks of Media, the first of whom, Ildighiz, began to reign in the year of Hegira 555, A. D. 1165. He was succeeded by Mohammed, his son; Kezel Arslan, brother of Mohammed; Aboubecre, son of Mohammed; Cotluc Enbanage and Modhaffereddin Usbeck two other sons of Mohammed, the latter of whom was stripped of his kingdom, and died in the year of the Hegira 622, A. D. 1232. The third dynasty called Atabekian-Fars, or the Atabeks of Persia, comprehended the following princes; namely, Modhaffereddin Ben Salgar, the first of the dynasty, who began to reign in the year of the Hegira 543, A. D. 1153; Modhaffereddin Zenghi, his brother; Modhaffereddin Taklah, son of Zenghi; Modhaffereddin Abou Schegia, brother of Taklah; Abubecre, grandson of Zenghi; Saad, son of Abubecre; and Mohammed, his son; Mohammed Schah, son of Salgar Schah, and grandson of Saad; Selgiuc Schah, another son of Salgar; Arschal Khatoun, son of Saad, and grandson of Abubecre; the last of this dynasty died in the year of the Hegira 663, A. D. 1273. There was another dynasty of princes called Atabekian Laristan, who made themselves masters of Lar, a province extending along the Persian Gulf; the first of whom was Abou-Thaher, son of Mohammed, a general of Salgar, the sultan of Persia. His successors were Nasraddin, or Nasreddin, his son, surnamed Takla; Schampseddin Alp Argoun, son of Takla; Joseph Schah, son of Alp Argoun; Afrasiab, son of Joseph Schah; Nosratteddin, son of Alp Argoun; Rokneddin, son of Joseph Schah; Modhaffereddin Afrasiab, son of Rokneddin.

ATALANTA (Myth.) Ἀτάλαντα, an Arcadian virgin and a huntress, was the daughter of Schoenus, king of Seyros, or, according to some, the daughter of Jasus, devoted herself to a life of celibacy; but having many suitors, on account of her beauty, she consented to accept the one who should excel her in running, on condition that the unsuccessful candidate should perish by the dart she carried in her hand. After many unsuccessful attempts on the part of others, Hippomenes, one of her admirers, having received three golden apples from Venus, threw them down at certain distances from him, which Atalanta turning aside to gather, afforded him time to reach the goal before her; in consequence of which he obtained her hand. It is said that the lovers polluted the temple of Cybele with the consummation of their marriage, for which they were changed into lions by the goddess. Some authors suppose there were two virgins of this name. Euripid. in Phœnix; Apollon. Argon. l. 1; Diodor. l. 4; Hygin. Fab. 99, &c.; Propert. l. 1. Paus. l. 1, c. 36; *Ælian. Var. History of Athens.

The kingdom of Athens is generally said to have been founded by Cecrops, A. M. 2477, A. C. 1558, although Pausanias makes Acteus to have been the first king of Attica, who had, among his successors, Ogyges, king of Thebes. Nearly two centuries after came Cecrops into Attica, from Sais, a town of Egypt, who reigned 50 years, and was succeeded by 16 other kings, in the following order:

This is the last archon mentioned on the Arundel marbles, although other names of archons are mentioned in history, as Antitheus, in the 160th Olympiad, and Herodes in the 180th. This democracy of the Athenians, however, experienced an interruption on two different occasions, namely, by the establishment of the 400 through the intrigues of Alcibiades; and afterwards by that of the 30 tyrants, by the influence of the Spartan commander Lysander. The Athenians distinguished themselves during the war with the Persians, particularly in the battles of Salamis and Marathon; but the Peloponnesian war, which lasted 27 years, terminated in the capture of the city by the Lacedæmonians, and its temporary subjection to the 30 tyrants. It afterwards fell, with the rest of the Greeks, successively into the hands of the Macedonians and the Romans, by whom the whole country was converted into a Roman province. What relates to the subsequent history of this city, will be found under the head of Athens.

Diodorus, Livy, Strabo, Pliny, Nepos, Plutarch, Justin, Ælian, &c.

ATHENÆ (Numis.) the figure or head of Minerva, the owl and the earthen vessel, are the ordinary symbols of Athens, as represented in the annexed cut. The Athenians honoured this goddess more than all other deities, because they looked upon her as the foundress of their city, which received her name, Ἀθῆνη. They employed the other symbols of the owl and the vessel, because the former was sacred to her, and abounded in the neighbourhood; and the latter because they were the inventors of earthenware. Sometimes the serpent as well as the owl is to be found on their coins, because it was the emblem of wisdom; and the figures of Jupiter with his thunder, Vulcan with his forceps and anvil, Ceres with the poppy and sow, &c., Diana with her bow and quiver, Hercules with his club, Æsculapius with his staff and serpent, are frequently substituted in the place of Minerva. The ordinary inscriptions of this city are Α. ΑΟ ΑΘΕ ΑΘΗ. ΑΘΙΝΑ ΑΘΙΝΑΙ. ΑΘΙΝΑΣ ΑΘΗΝΑΙΩΝ, with the names of their magistrates. Goltz. Græc.; Vaill. Num. Gr.; Spanh. Dissert.; Beg. *Thes. Brand. ATHENÆUM (Geog.) a promontory of Italy, now Capo di Campanella.

ATHENÆUM (Topog.) a place at Athens sacred to Minerva, and devoted to learning, whither philosophers, orators, and artists resorted and claimed or repeated their compositions. A similar place bearing the same name, was built by the emperor Adrian, A. D. 135. A third place of this kind was formed at Lyons, which has since been converted into an abbey. This was distinguished by games that were instituted by Caligula.

ATHENÆUS (Hist.) Ἀθηναῖος, a son of Pericles, one of the Spartan plenipotentiaries in the treaty of peace between them and the Athenians. Thucyd. l. 4, c. 19.

ATHENÆUS, a brother of Eumenes III, king of Pergamus, was much in favour with the Romans, by whom he was employed as a general on several occasions. Liv. l. 38, and 45.

ATHENÆUS, an orator and peripatetic philosopher, who was implicated in a conspiracy against Augustus, but escaped punishment, and was afterwards crushed by the fall of a house. Strab. l. 4.

ATHENÆUS (Biog.) an historian, who, according to Diodorus, gave an account of Semiramis.

ATHENÆUS, a Greek grammarian of the second century, and native of Naucratis, flourished in the reign of M. Aurelius. He wrote many things, of which there remains one only, namely, his historical work entitled 'Deipnosophistæ.' The best editions of Athenæus are that of Cusaubon, fol. Lugd. 1612; and that of Schweighæuser, 14 vols. 8vo. 1801-1807.

ATHENÆUS, an engineer in the reign of Gallienus, probably the author of a work on 'Machines for War,' which was printed in the collection of ancient mathematicians, fol. Gr. and Lat. Paris. 1693.

ATHENAGORAS (Hist.) Ἀθηναγόρας, a popular leader among the Syracusans.

ATHENAGORAS, a Greek, to whose charge Chios was entrusted by Darius; but a sedition arising, he was sent bound to the Macedonians. Q. Curt. l. 4.

ATHENAGORAS, a general under Philip, king of Macedon, and father of Perseus, who attacked the Romans, but was defeated. Liv. l. 39, c. 27.

ATHENAGORAS, also a general of Perseus, whether the same as the preceding or not is doubtful. Liv. l. 44.

ATH

ATHENAGORAS (Biog.) an Athenian philosopher and convert to Christianity, who wrote an 'Apology for Christianity,' which he addressed to the emperors Aurelius and Commodus, about the year 180; also a piece on the Resurrection, both of which are extant, and have been printed often. The best edition of Athenagoras is that of Dechair, 8vo. Gr. and Lat. Oxon. 1706. His works are also published in the 'Bibliotheca Patrum.' The romance of Theagorus and Charidea is falsely ascribed to him.

ATHENAIS (Myth.) a sibyl of Erythræa, in the age of Alexander.

ATHENAIS (Hist.) a daughter of the philosopher Leontius, assumed the name of Eudoxia, when she became the wife of the emperor Theodosius the Younger.

ATHENION (Hist.) Ἀθηνίων, a favourite of Ptolemy Evergetes, king of Egypt, was sent to Onias to demand the tribute which was due. Joseph. Antiq. l. 12, c. 3.

ATHENION, a man of Cilicia, who was a ringleader of the slaves in Sicily, but being taken prisoner, was torn in pieces by the soldiers.

ATHENION, a slave of Egypt, who was set at liberty by his master, after which he took the name of Aristion, and obtained the supreme power at Athens.

ATHENOBIOUS (Bibl.) Ἀθηνόβιος, son of Demetrius, was sent by Antiochus Sidetes, king of Syria, to Simon Maccabæus, to surrender Joppa, Gaza, and the fortress of Jerusalem, and to pay him tribute, &c. 1 Maccab. xv.

ATHENOCLES (Biog.) Ἀθηνόκλης, a Greek historian, who wrote an account of Assyria. Agath. l. 2.

ATHENOCLES, a skilful engineer. Polyæn. l. 6.

ATHENODORUS (Hist.) Ἀθηνόδορος, a leader of the Greeks who revolted from Alexander, and was afterwards killed. Q. Curt. l. 9.

ATHENODORUS (Ecc.) a disciple of Origen, and bishop of Neocæsarea, in Pontus, was at the council of Antioch in 264, and suffered martyrdom under the emperor Aurelian. Baron. Annal. Ann. 233.

ATHENODORUS (Biog.) two sculptors, one an Arcadian, and the other a Rhodian, the latter of whom took part with Agesander and Polydorus in the execution of the Laocoon. Plin. l. 36; Paus. l. 10.

ATHENODORUS, a stoic of Tarsus, and a favourite of Augustus, who followed his counsels. He wrote many things mentioned by ancient writers. Cic. ad Fam. l. 3, ep. 7; Strab. l. 14; Sueton. in Claud. c. 4; Plut. in Alex.

ATHENOGENES (Ecc.) a martyr in the third century, who is said to have composed a hymn while in the flames. S. Basil. de Spirit. Sanct. c. 29.

ATHENS (Geog.) the once celebrated city of Greece, [vide Athenæ] is now a small town in the province of Livadiu, the ancient Attica, known by the inhabitants by the name of Settine; and situated on the rivulets of Ilissus and Cephissus, 60 m. E. Corinth, 100 m. N. E. Misitra or Sparta, and above 300 S. W. Constantinople. Lon. 23° 52' E., lat. 37° 58' N.

Political History of Athens.

From the invasion of Xerxes to its final subjugation by the Turks, Athens has had a greater diversity of masters, and been exposed to severer hardships, than almost any other city. It was twice burnt by the Persians, twice destroyed, once by Philip II, of Macedon, and again by Sylla. The Acropolis was plundered by Tiberius; the city was desolated by the Goths in the reign of Claudius, and the whole territory was ravaged and ruined by Alaric, when he made his irruption into Greece in 396. It was besieged by Sgure, a petty prince of the Morea, in 1204; but was successfully defended by the archbishop. It afterwards fell into the hands of Romiface X, marquis of Montserrat, who gave it to Otho de la Roche, one of his followers. By him and his descendants it was governed for a considerable time with the title of duke, until it became a fief of Sicily; and from thence it was transferred to Renier Acciaoli, a Florentine, who bequeathed it to the Venetians; in whose possession it remained until 1455, when it was taken by Omar, a general of Mahomet II. It was sacked by the Venetians in 1464; and in 1687 it was once more bombarded and taken by them, but retaken by the Turks in 1688; since which they have retained undisturbed possession of it. The Turkish governor of Athens is called the Vaivode, who is either changed or continued in his office every year.

Present State of Athens.

Athens is at present a small open place with streets, which, whatever they may have been anciently, are at present extremely narrow and irregular. The houses are mostly mean and straggling, and many have large courts or areas before them; but the eye of the curious traveller is met everywhere by vestiges of its ancient splendour, which are more numerous and in better preservation here than in most parts of Greece, notwithstanding the many vicissitudes it has undergone. One of its most interesting remains is the citadel, formerly called the Acropolis, which is situated on a rock inaccessible on all sides. On this citadel stood the Parthenon or temple of Minerva, which was destroyed by the Persians, and rebuilt by Pericles; it remains, though in a damaged state, a model of magnificence of the Doric Order, now converted into a mosque. The Areopagus, or Hill of Mars, which was almost in the centre of the ancient town, is now on the outside, where the steps cut in the rock to ascend this famous tribunal are still to be seen. The temple of Theseus is almost entire except the roof, which has been repaired, and that of Jupiter Olympius retains 16 out of its 120 columns. Besides these there are still to be seen the remains of the temple of Victory, which is of the Ionic Order, and serves the Turks as a powder magazine; and the Temple of the Winds, of which Vitruvius speaks, together with many other monuments of antiquity. The long walls which surrounded Athens are now demolished, but their foundations have been traced by late travellers. The far famed Ilissus and Cephissus are now almost dry, and scarcely deserve the name of rivers. They empty themselves into the Gulf of Engia, at some distance from the town. Of its three ancient harbours, the Piræus, though it hardly presents a memorial of its ancient aspect, is now frequented by a few French and English traders, and is known by the name of Porto Leone. Its population consists of from 8 to 10,000 inhabitants, one-fourth of which are Turks, the rest Greeks, who are supplied with water by an aqueduct from Mount Hymettus. The honey of Attica, especially that from Mount Hymettus, retains its credit; and the olive still continues to cover the site of the ancient city, so as to form a forest in the plain adjoining to the town, which extends the length of a league; covering the Ceramicus, the Academy, and the gardens of the philosophers; to which the sacred road of Eleusis, filled with the relics of ancient tombs and monuments, is the principal access. Besides the four mosques of the Turks, there are not less than thirty-six churches in Athens, and five times the number of chapels. Between the Areopagus and the ancient temple of Theseus, there is a ruined church which was dedicated to Dionysius, the Areopagite, who was the first Christian and bishop of Athens. It is now the residence of the metropolitan of the Greek church. There are also a number of convents for both sexes.

ATHLONE (Geog.) a town of Connaught, in Ireland, situated on both sides the Shannon; which was besieged by the prince of Orange in 1691, and after a vigorous defence was taken the following year, when all Ireland submitted to the ruling powers.

ATHOLL, John, first Earl of (Hist.) of the Stewart family, mentioned under Heraldry, was sent as ambassador into England in 1463, and had a principal command in the army of king James against his son and the rebel lords in 1488; for which he was imprisoned in the castle of Dunbar, on the death of that monarch, and died in 1512.

ATHOLL, John, fourth Earl of, being a zealous Roman Catholic, strongly opposed the Reformation in the Parliament in 1560, was sworn a privy councillor to queen Mary in 1561; entered heartily into the association for the defence of king James VI, was constituted lord high chancellor of Scotland in 1577, and died in 1579 of poison, as was suspected, administered by the regent Morton; but the latter, when under sentence of death, attested his innocence in this matter.

ATHOLL, John, first Marquis of, son of the preceding, took an active part in the royal cause as long as resistance was of any avail, for which he suffered in his person and estate; but at the Restoration he was sworn a privy councillor to Charles II, and, after assisting at the Revolution, died in 1703.

ATHOLL, John, first Earl of, of the Murray family mentioned under Heraldry, raised 1800 men at the breaking out of the rebellion, in defence of the crown, and exerted himself in the same cause until his death in 1642.

ATHOLL, John, second Earl of, was killed at Flodden in 1513, after enjoying his title not more than a year.

ATHOLL, Duke, Marquess, and Earl of (Her.) titles at present enjoyed by the Murray family, which have been long settled in the county of Perth; and are descended from Sir Malcolm Murray, whose son Sir William Murray, by his marriage with Adda-Moravia, daughter of Malises Senechal, of Strathern, became possessed of the barony of Tullibardin, and was summoned as one of the barons in 1292, to Berwick by Edward I, when that prince was to determine the controvery respecting the succession to the crown of Scotland, then disputed between John Baliol and Robert Bruce. [Vide Murray] The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Murray, duke of Atholl, marquis of Atholl and Tullibardine, earl of Atholl, Tullibardine, &c.; viscount of Balquhidar, Glenalmond, and Glenlyon, baron Strange, of Knockyn, Wotton, &c.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st, azure; three stars argent, within a double treasure flowered and counter-flowered or, for Murray; 2d, gules, three legs armed proper, conjoined at the upper part of the thighs, flexed in a triangle, garnished and spurred or, for lord of the Isle of Man; 3d, quarterly, 1st and 4th, argent, on a bend azure three bucks' heads cabossed or, for Stanley; 2d and 3d, gules, two lions passant in pale argent, for Strange; 4th, quarterly, 1st and 4th, or, a fess cheque argent and azure for Stewart; 2d and 3d, pale of six or, and sable, for the title of Atholl.

Crest. A demi-savage, wreathed about the head and waist, holding in his right hand a sword, and in his left a key, all proper.

Supporters. Dexter, a lion gules, collared azure, charged with three stars argent, sinister a savage, wreathed about the head and waist as in the crest, his feet in fetters of iron, thereto a chain affixed, held in sinister hand.

Motto. "Furth fortune and fill the fetters."

ATHOLL, Earl of (Her.) a title originally enjoyed by the family of Stewart, which became extinct at the death of John, the fifth earl, but was revived in the person of John Murray, earl of Tullibardine, who married Lady Dorothea Stewart, eldest daughter and lineal heir of John, the last earl before-mentioned.

ATHOS (Geog.) Ἄθος, a mountain of Macedonia, now called Monte Santo, projecting into the Ægean Sea like a promontory. It is celebrated in antiquity as the mountain through which Xerxes caused a trench to be cut for the reception of the waters of the sea that his fleet might be conveyed over it.

ATIA (Hist.) vide Actia.

ATIA, gens, a plebeian family at Rome, whom Virgil, in compliment to Augustus, makes to descend from Atya, the grandson of Ascanius. It was divided into the branches of the Balbi and Labieni.

ATIA, gens (Numis.) this family struck some medals distinguished by the inscriptions Marcus ATIUS BALBUS Prætor; Quintus LABIENUS PARTHICUS IMPERATOR. Vaill. Consular.; Patin. Imp.; Morell. Fam.; Pembroch. Mus. pt. 3.

ATILIA (Hist.) vide Attilia.

ATILIA, gens (Numis.) the name of this family is mostly written in inscriptions with one t, but otherwise with a single or double l. The coins bearing this name belong to the Sarani, the Reguli, Bulbi, and Calatini. Those of the Sarani bear, on one part, SAR. SARAN. SARANUS; on the other, Marcus ATILIUS; C. AL. Caius Atilius; L. TILI. Lucius Atilius. Some of these medals are also inscribed Serranus, as SEXtus ATILIUS Marci Filius SERRANUS, Caius ATILIUS Marci Filius SERRANUS. One coin inscribed simply Marcus ATILIUS is attributed to the illustrious general Regulus, who is supposed to have coined it in the first Punic war; others bear the name of Regulus, as M. ATIL. Marci Filius Lucii Nepos REGULUS—M. ATIL. Marci Filius Marci Nepos REGULUS—C. ATIL. REG. V., Caius Atilius Regulus. Some bear the name of Calatinus, as Aulus ATILIUS CALATINUS, or Aulus ATILIUS Auli Filius Caii Nepos, to which is added CALATINUS. One also bears the name of Bulbus, as C. TIL. A. F. Caius Atilius Auli Filius, in another part, BULBUS. Goltz. Fast.; Vaill. Consul.; Morell. Fam.

ATILIUS (Hist.) a freedman, who exhibited games to the people in an amphitheatre so badly constructed that it broke down, and killed or wounded 50,000 people; in consequence of which he was banished, and a law was made to prohibit any person from exhibiting games who could not guarantee the security of the building. Tacit. Annal. l. 4, c. 62.

ATILLA (Hist.) vide Acilia.

ATINA (Geog.) a town of Campania, now Atino; the first which commenced hostilities against Æneas. Virg. Æn. l. 7; Mart. l. 10.

ATINO (Geog.) the ancient Atina; a town of Naples, which was formerly episcopal, but the bishopric was suppressed by pope Innocent II.

ATKINS, James (Ecc.) or Etkins, bishop of Galloway, in Scotland, went to Oxford in 1637 to finish his education; and, after being elected bishop of Murray, was translated to the see of Galloway, and died in 1687 much respected. He rendered himself obnoxious to the presbyterian party during the rebellion, and was obliged to fly to Holland.

ATKYNS, Sir Robert (Hist.) lord chief baron of the Exchequer, of an ancient family, was born in 1621, and died in 1702. After being educated at Baliol college, Oxford, and prepared for the bar at one of the inns of court, he was appointed a king's serjeant at law in 1671, a judge of the court of Common Pleas in 1672, and lord chief baron of the Exchequer in 1689. His writings are collected into one volume, 8vo. under the title of 'Parliamentary and Political Tracts,' 1734.

ATKYNS, Sir Robert (Biog.) an antiquary, and son of the preceding, was born in 1646, and died in 1711. He wrote 'The History of Gloucestershire,' which was published in one volume, fol. in 1712.

ATKYNS, Richard, a typographical writer, was born in Gloucestershire in 1615, studied at Baliol college in 1629, and died in 1677. He wrote, 1. 'Original and Growth of Printing,' 4to. 1664. 2. 'Vindication,' &c. which related to his own private concerns.

ATLANTES (Geog.) Ἀτλαντες, inhabitants of Africa, near Mount Atlas, who daily cursed the rising and setting of the sun. Herod. l. 4, c. 184; Solin. c. 34; Mela, l. 1, c. 8; Plin. l. 5, c. 8; Schol. in Dionys. Perieg.

ATLANTIADES (Myth.) a patronymic of Mercury, the grandson of Atlas.

ALANTIDES (Myth.) Ἀλαντιδες, the seven daughters of Atlas, who married the gods, and, after their death, were made into a constellation called the Pleiades. [Vide Pleiades in Technological Dictionary]

ATTEIA, gens (Hist.) a plebeian family at Rome, the surname of which was Capito. [Vide Atteius.]

ATTEIA, gens (Numis.) mention is made of this family on medals of Augustus and Caligula, who filled the office of duumviri in planting colonies, as may be learnt from the in-

- scription Caio ATTEo CAPIToni Caio PONTIO Publico ORESTI II VIRis. Morel. Numm. Consul.
- ATTEIUS CAPITO (Hist.) a tribune of the people, commanded some troops in the war between Augustus and M. Antony. Cic. de Div. l. 1, c. 16; Vell. Pater. l. 2; Appian. de Bell. Civil. l. 5; Dio. l. 39.
- ATTEIUS CAPITO, son of the preceding and a distinguished lawyer, was raised to the consulship by Augustus, and died in the reign of Tiberius. He left several works on law, which are quoted by Aulus Gellius and others. Tac. Annal. l. 1.
- ATTEIUS PACUVIUS (Biog.) a Roman lawyer in the time of Julius Caesar, was a disciple of the famous Servius Sulpitius.
- ATTEIUS SANCTUS, a philosopher of the second century. Lamprid. in Commod.
- ATTELLIUS, P. Hister (Hist.) a governor of Pannonia in the time of Claudius. Tac. Annal. l. 12, c. 29.
- ATTENDOLO, Darius (Hist.) a general in the army of Charles V, in his expedition against Piedmont; wrote 'Il Duello,' Venice, 1560, or a History of Duelling; besides a variety of poems.
- ATTENDOLO, or Attenduli, Margaret, a sister of Sforza, grand constable of Naples, who, when her brother was perfidiously imprisoned, armed her friends, and, at their request, made such reprisals as caused his liberation.
- ATTERBURY, Francis (Hist.) grandfather of the bishop of Rochester, and rector of Milton, in Northamptonshire, was among the number of ministers who subscribed the solemn league and covenant.
- ATTERBURY, Lewis, son of the before-mentioned, and father of the bishop of Rochester, was entered a student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1647, and took his degrees in 1649 and 1651. He submitted to the republican visitors, but, on the restoration, obtained some preferments. He was accidentally drowned in 1693 near his own house, leaving some occasional sermons in print.
- ATTERBURY, Francis (Ecc.) bishop of Rochester, was born in 1662 at Newport Pagnel, in Buckinghamshire, educated at Westminster under Dr. Busby, sent to Christ Church, Oxford, in 1680; and, after passing through various preferments in the church, was appointed to the bishopric of Rochester in 1713; but falling under the suspicion of favouring the claims of the chevalier, he was committed to the tower, and being, after a week's trial, found guilty of high treason, was sentenced to be banished. He was in consequence carried to Calais, and from thence conducted to Montpellier, where he died in 1729. Of his writings, which were mostly controversial, his Sermons and Letters are the best known. The former are extant in 4 vols. 8vo.
- ATTERBURY, Lewis (Biog.) eldest son of Lewis Atterbury above-mentioned, and brother of the bishop of Rochester, was born in 1656, passed his degrees, as student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1679 and 1680, and died in 1731. He had solicited the deanery of Rochester from his brother, but met with a refusal to his small mortification. Among his works are, 1. 'Sermons,' 2 vols. 8vo. 1699. 2. 'Some Letters relating to the History of the Council of Trent.' 3. 'An Answer to a Popish Book,' entitled 'A True and Modest Account of the chief Points in Controversy between the Roman Catholics and the Protestants,' &c.
- ATTES (Myth.) Ἄττης, a son of Calaus, king of Lydia, who, being a favourite with the goddess Cybele, Jupiter out of jealousy sent a wild boar to destroy Attes and the country. Paus. l. 7, c. 17.
- ATTHIS (Hist.) Ἀτθίς, a daughter of Cranaus, who, according to Apollodorus, gave her name to Attica. Apollod. l. 3, c. 14; Paus. l. 1, c. 2.
- ATTICA (Geog.) Ἀττική, a maritime country of Greece, which derived its name either from ἄκτις, a shore, or from Atthis, the daughter of Cranaus above-mentioned, and is now called the Duchy of Setthines. The people of Attica were formerly divided into 10 tribes, each of which occupied a part of the city of Athens; these were afterwards increased to the number of 13, and comprehended not less than 174 towns or villages. They derived their names from the heroes who ruled over the country; namely, Erechtheis, from king Erechtheus. Egeis, from Ægeus, the father of Theseus. Pandionis, from Pandion, king of Athens. Leontis, from the hero Leo, who devoted his daughters for the safety of his country. Acamantis, from Acamas, the son of Theseus. Adrianis, from a ruler of Adria. Ceneis, from Ceneus, the son of Pandion. Hippothonis, from Hippothoon, the son of Neptune. Cecropis, from Cecrops the king. Aiantis, from Ajax, the son of Telamon. Antiochis, from Antiochus, the son of Hercules. Attalis, from Attalus, king of Pergamus. Apollodor. l. 3; Strab. l. 9; Plin. l. 4; Paus. l. 1; Eustath. ad Dionys. Perieg. Meurs. Spon. Voyage d'Italie.
- ATTICUS, Titus Pomponius (Hist.) a Roman knight, so called because he wrote Greek with Attic purity; is well known as the friend of Cicero, M. Antony, Caesar, Pompey, and many others of the opposite factions, with whom he remained on intimate terms without siding with either party. After a life of privacy and devotion to letters, he starved himself to death at the age of 77, U. C. 721. Cic. ad Attic.; Cornel. Nep. in Vit.; Plin. l. 35, c. 2; Tac. Annal. l. 2, c. 43.

AUDRAN, Claude, was born in 1592, and died in 1677. He was an engraver, and the father of three great artists in the same line.

AUDRAN, Carl or Karl, brother or cousin-german of the preceding, engraved upwards of 120 prints, among which the 'Annunciation,' from Annibale Caracci; and the 'Assumption,' from Domenichino, are the most esteemed.

AUDRAN, Germain, eldest son of Claude, was born in 1631, and died in 1710; leaving four sons, all artists. He had a high reputation in his line, which had obtained him the honour of being chosen a member of the academy.

AUDRAN, Claude, the second son of Claude, was born in 1639, and died in 1684. He studied painting at Rome, and was employed by Le Brun, to assist him in the battles of Alexander.

AUDRAN, Girard, the third son of Claude, and the most distinguished of the three, was born in 1640, and died in 1703. He is considered by Mr. Strutt as the greatest engraver in the historical line that ever existed. 'The Battles of Alexander,' from the pencil of Le Brun, are his most distinguished performances.

AUDRAN, Benoit or Benoit, second son of Germain, was born in 1661, and died in 1721, engraver to the king.

AUDRAN, John, the third son of Germain, was born in 1667, and died in 1756, after having acquired a reputation nearly equal to that of his uncle Gerard.

AUDRAN, Louis, the 1st son of Germain, was born in 1670, and died in 1712, leaving but few specimens of his skill in the art.

AUDRAN, Benedict, son of John, was also an engraver of some note, and died in 1772.

AVEIN (Geog.) a town in the grand duchy of Luxembourg, 6 m. N. Rochefort, remarkable for the action in 1634, between the French and Spaniards, which terminated to the disadvantage of the latter.

AVEIRO (Geog.) a town of Beira, in Portugal, with the title of a duchy, 33 m. S. Oporto, lon. 8° 34' W., lat. 40° 40' N. It received from Alphonso III. the singular privilege that no stranger, not even of the blood royal, might pass a night in the town without permission of the magistrate.

AVELLANADA, Alphonso Fernandez de (Hist.) a native of Tordesillas, is principally known as the author of a continuation of Don Quixote, entitled 'La Segunda Parte del Ingenioso Hidalgo D. Quixote de la Mancha,' which is far inferior to the production of Cervantes.

Benevento, and 25 E. Naples, lon. 14° 39' E., lat. 40° 54' N. This town has repeatedly suffered from earthquakes, particularly in 1694, when it was almost ruined.

AVENACUM (Geog.) a town of France, now Avenay.

AVENELLES, Peter (Hist.) an advocate in the parliament of Paris, who in 1560 discovered the conspiracy of Amboise, as it was called, and informed against the conspirators. Thuan. Hist. l. 24.

AVENIO (Geog.) a town of Gallia Narbonensis, now Avignon, which was esteemed a town of such antiquity as to date its origin from the time of the Phocæans, who built Marseilles, U.C. 215, A.C. 539. [Vide Avignon] Strab. l. 4; Mel. l. 2, c. 5; Plin. l. 3, c. 4; Ptol. l. 2, c. 10.

AVENPACE (Biog.) a Spaniard by birth, but an Arabian by family, wrote Commentaries on Euclid. He was imprisoned at Cordova on account of his sceptical opinions, and is said to have been poisoned in 1187.

AVENTICUM (Geog.) a town of the Helvetians, now Wiefelsburg, or in the French Avanche. It existed in the time of Brennus, and was the capital of Helvetia in the time of Cæsar. Sabinus, the father of Vespasian, is said to have been a native of this place, which this emperor began to rebuild, and his son Titus finished; whence it was called Colonia Flavia, as we learn from an inscription COLONIA PIA FLAVIA CONSTANS EMERITA AVENTICUM HELVETIORUM FOEDERATA. Tacit. Hist. l. 2, 68; Ammian. Marcell. l. 15.

AVENTIN (Ecc.) the name of two saints in the 16th century.

AVENTIN, John (Biog.) an historian, was born in 1466 at Abensperg, and died in 1534. He is well known as the author of 'Annalium Libri VII,' &c. fol. Lips. 1710. This work was first published in 1554 by Jerome Zuglerus, who omitted Aventine's Invectives against the Clergy, but an uncastrated edition was afterwards printed by the Protestants in 1580 at Basil. Besides which he wrote, 1. 'Chronica Bavarie,' fol. Nuremb. 1522. 2. 'Henrici IV Vita, Epistolæ,' &c. 4to. August. 1518. 3. 'Chronicon, sive Annales Schirenses,' 4to. Bipont. 1600. 4. 'Liber de Causis Miseriarum, cum Chronicis Turcicis,' 4to. 1578. 5. 'Antiquitates Danicæ,' 4to. Hafn. 1642; to which Gesner has added in the list of his works, 6. 'Numerandi per Digitos Manuque Veterum Consuetudines.'

AVENTINUS (Myth.) a son of Hercules by the priestess Rhea, who assisted Æneas against Turnus. Virg. Æn. l. 7.

AVENTINUS (Hist.) surnamed Sylvius, the elder son of Aladrius, was the 12th king of Latium after Æneas.

AVENTINUS, Mons (Topog.) one of the seven hills, on which Rome was built, whereon stood temples to Diana, Bona Dea, Hercules, the Goddess of Liberty, and that of Victory. It derived its name, according to most authors, from king Aventinus;

Ovid. Fast. l. 4.

— in Romulum fulmina missa ferunt
Venit Aventinus post hos; locus unde vocatur
Mons quoque.

Or, according to some, from aves, the birds which abounded there; but different writers have adopted a diversity of derivations. It was originally very woody.

Ovid. Fast. l. 1; v. 551.

Cacus Aventinæ timor, atque infamia sylvæ.

And was also called collis Dianæ.

Mart. l. 7, ep. 78.

Æquilis domus est, domus est tibi colle Dianæ.

AVEN-ZOAR (Biog.) or Abu-Merman Abdamalek Ebn Zour, an Arabian physician in the 11th and 12th centuries, was the author of a book on the method of preparing medicines, which is much esteemed. It was translated into Hebrew in 1280; and thence into Latin by Paravicinus, and printed in fol. at Venice, 1490 and 1553.

AVEO (Geog.) or Abydos, known by the ancients by the name of Ahydus, is now a small town of Natolia, in Asiatic Turkey, with a fortress, which is one of the Dardanelles, or old castles built by Mahomet II opposite to the Dardanelle of Romania.

AVERANI (Biog.) the name of three brothers of Florence, who distinguished themselves; namely, Benedict Averani, who wrote some Latin poems and orations; Nicholas, who was one of the most distinguished lawyers of his day; and Joseph, who distinguished himself as a philosopher and a scholar, and died in 1738. His works are, 'De Libertate Civitatis Florentiæ ejusque Dominis,' Pis. 4to. 1721. 2. 'Esperienze fatte collo specchio istoria di Firenze sopra le Gemme, e le Pietre dure,' printed in the 'Galleria di Minerva,' vol. vi. 3. 'Disputatio de Jure Belli et Pacis,' Florent. 1703. 4. 'Prefazione alle Poesie Toscane di Ansaldo Ansaldo,' Ibid. 1704. 5. 'Vita Benedicti Averanii,' prefixed to his works, 3 vols. fol. 1717. 6. 'Dissertatio de Repressaliis habita Pisis,' 1713; published in Migliorucci's Institut. Jur. Canon. 1732. 7. 'Oratio de Jurisprudencia,' &c. 8. 'Interpretationum Juris Libri Duo,' 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1716, and 'Libri Tres Posteriorcs,' of the same, 1746. 9. 'Dissertatio de Calculorum seu Latrunculorum Ludo,' Venet. 1742, in 'Miscellanea di Vari Opuscoli,' vol. vii. 10. 'Monumenta Latina Posthuma Josephi Averanii Florentini,' Florent. 1768; besides a Treatise on the Sphere, a Defence of Galileo, and other works in MS.

AVERDY, Clement Charles de l' (Hist.) a minister of state, and comptroller of the finances, under Louis XV, in 1763, was guillotined at the commencement of the revolution in 1794. He had been a member of the academy, and published, 1. 'Code Penal,' 12mo. 1752. 2. 'De la Pleine Souveraineté du Roi sur la Provence de Bretagne,' 8vo. 1765. 3. 'Mémoire sur le Procès Criminel de Robert d'Artois, pair de France.' 4. 'Expériences de Gambais sur les Bles Nôris, ou Caries,' 8vo. 1788.

AVERNO, Lago d' (Geog.) a lake near Pausuolo, in Naples, better known by its ancient name. [Vide Avernus]

AVERNUS (Geog.) a lake of Campania, near Baia, now Lago d'Averno, which was so putrid that the birds could not live on its banks; whence its original name Ἀορνός, i. e. without birds; whence also it was famed to be the entrance into hell.

Virg. Æn. l. 6, v. 240.

AUGA (Myth.) Auge, or Augea, Ἀυγή, daughter of Aleus, king of Tegea, had a son by Hercules called Telephus, in consequence of which her father attempted to make away with her, but she was saved by the gods, or, according to some, by Minerva. Apollod. l. 2; Hygin. Fab. 29; Paus. l. 8.

AUGARUS (Hist.) vide Abgarus.

AUGEAS (Myth.) or Augias, son of Eleus, and one of the Argonauts, had an immense number of oxen and goats; and, as the stables in which they had been kept had not been cleaned for 30 years, he promised to Hercules the 10th of his herds if he would perform the task. Hercules accepted the offer, and affected the purpose by turning the course of the river Alpheus so that it might run through the stables; when Augeas refused him the reward on pretence that he had made use of artifice, and Hercules in consequence drove Augeas from his kingdom of Elis, and, as is said by some, put him to death. The proverb of Augean stable for an impossibility takes its rise from this fable. Apollod. l. 12; Hygin. Fab. 14; Strab. l. 8; Plin. l. 17; Serv. in Virg. Æn. l. 8.

AUGER, Edmund (Ecc.) a French Jesuit of Troyes, distinguished himself by his zeal against heresy, having, as it is said, been instrumental in the conversion of 40,000 heretics. He died in 1591, leaving some controversial works.

AUGER, Athanasius (Biog.) a French critic, was born at Paris in 1724, and died in 1791. His principal works were translations from Demosthenes, Æschines, and Lysias; and also of the Orations in Herodotus, Thucydides, and Xenophon, &c.

AUGSBURG (Geog.) an imperial town of Suabia, in Germany, situated at the confluence of the Verdach and Lech, 40 miles N. Munich. Lon. 10° 58'. lat. 48° 17' N.

Political History of Augsburg.

Augsburg, which received the name of Augusta Vindelicorum, from the Roman colony which was planted there by Augustus, was very powerful in the time of Attila, by whom it was almost ruined in 451. It was rebuilt by the Suevi, or Germans, and came afterwards into the hands of Clovis, and from him into the hands of the French. It suffered in 787 when Charlemagne went against the duke of Bavaria; and, after passing from the French to the Germans, it was made a free and imperial city by Louis III in 912, after which it became very flourishing, and was chosen by the emperors as the place for holding their diets. In 1088 it was taken and pillaged in the contest between Rudolphus, duke of Suabia, and Henry IV; and in 1131 it was almost entirely consumed in the reign of Lotharius II. In the reigns of Charles IV, Venceslas, and Sigismond, it received new privileges, and supplied these emperors with money to carry on the war against the Hussites. Maximilian I held here many diets of the empire, and Luther attended that of 1518 to give an account of himself; and Charles V held one in 1530, where the Protestants presented their confession of faith, called the Augsburg Confession; and in 1548 this emperor held another, at which the Interim was decreed. It was frequently taken and retaken during the wars that followed in Germany, and suffered very much during the late revolutionary wars.

Ecclesiastical History of Augsburg.

Augsburg is a bishop's see, suffragan of Mentz, the first bishop of which, mentioned in history, was Zosimus, in 608. S. Boniface held a council here in 742; and another council was held in 952; also a synod in 1548.

AUGUSTANA Castra (Geog.) a town of Vindelicia, now Gaisting.

AUGUSTIN, St. (Ecc.) or St. Augustin, one of the most eminent fathers of the church, was born at Tagaste, in Africa, in 354, and died bishop of Hippo, in 430, after having repaired the irregularities of his early years by a life of extraordinary piety and zeal. He died while the city of Hippo was besieging by the Vandals, who, on taking it, had respect to his library, his works, and his body. The works of St. Augustin have frequently been printed singly and collectively, particularly 'De Civitate Dei.' The best edition of St. Augustin is that of the Benedictines, 12 vols. fol. Antv. 1700—1703. Prosper. et Marcellin. in Chron.; Bellarmin. de Script. Eccl.; Tillemont. Mem.; Dupin. Nouv. Bibl.

AUGUSTIN, St., first archbishop of Canterbury, and the apostle of the English, was sent by pope Gregory I, in 597, on this holy mission, in which he succeeded so well with Ethelbert, king of Kent, that he and all his subjects were converted to Christianity. Augustin was afterwards consecrated by the archbishop of Arles archbishop of Canterbury, which was erected into the metropolitan see of all England. He died there in 604.

AUGUSTIN, Anthony, archbishop of Tarragona, was, in 1562, at the council of Trente, raised to the see of Tarragona in 1574, and died, in 1506. He wrote many works on civil and ecclesiastical subjects.

AUGUSTIN, St. (Geog.) capital of the province of East Florida, situated on the coast of the Atlantic, on a peninsula, consisting of a narrow strip of land, lon. 81° 40' W., lat. 29° 58' N. It was burnt by sir Francis Drake, in 1586; by captain Davis, with the Buccaneers, in 1685; after which it was rebuilt, and in 1702 it was besieged by the English, who, being unable to take the castle, set fire to and destroyed the town. In 1744 it was again unsuccessfully attacked by the English under general Oglethorpe.

AUGUSTODUNUM (Geog.) a town of Gallia Lugdunensis, and capital of the Aedui, now Autun, [vide Autun] is supposed to have derived its name from Augustus, by whom it was restored. Pompon. Mel. l. 3, c. 2; Ptol. l. 2, c. 9.

AUGUSTOMAGUS (Geog.) a town of Gaul, supposed to be the present Senlis.

AUGUSTORITUM (Geog.) a town of Aquitania, now Limoges.

AUGUSTULUS (Hist.) otherwise called Flavius Romulus Augustus, or Momyllus, was the son of Orestes, and the last Roman emperor, who being subdued by Odoacer, the king of the Heruli, abdicated the throne, and thus put an end to the western empire, in 475, after it had subsisted 522 years from the battle of Pharsalia. Cassiodor. et Marcell. in Chron.; Jornandez, Procopius, Agathias, &c.

AUGUSTULUS (Numis.) this prince is represented on some medals as in the annexed figure, inscriptions DN. FL. MOMYL. AUGUSTUL. P. F. AUG.—D. N. ROMULUS AUGUSTULUS. P. F. AUG.

AUGUSTUS (Hist.) the title assumed by all the Roman emperors who succeeded the first of this name. At first this name served as a personal distinction, and Cæsar was employed as the family name; but in the later periods of Rome the title of Augustus was given only to the emperor, and Cæsar to the second person in the state, who was considered as presumptive heir.

AUGUSTUS, Octavianus Cæsar, son of Octavius and Accia, the daughter of Julia, and sister of Julius Cæsar. He was born under the consulship of Cicero and M. Antony, U. C. 691, A. M. 3941; according to Uaber, A. C. 63, on the 23d, or, according to Suetonius, the 22d of September. He was at first called Octavius, and after his elevation he had the title of Augustus conferred upon him. Being adopted by his uncle, he succeeded him at his death, and after subduing all his enemies he attained to the sovereign power, which he held 44 years, and died in the 14th year after the birth of our Saviour. He adopted Tiberius Cæsar, who, at his recommendation, succeeded him in the empire. [Vide Augustus, under Numismatics and Plate I] Sueton. in Vit.; Horatius, Virgil, Ovid, Paternulus, Tacitus, Dio, &c.

AUGUSTUS (Nums.) and Augusta, were abbreviated on medals AU. AUG. AUGUST., and for two imperial persons AUGG. Augusti or Augustæ, for three AUGGG. &c.

History of Avignon.

Avignon was a Roman colony by the name of Avenio, until the fifth century, when it came into the hands of the French, from whom it was sometimes taken by the Saracens, and again recovered. In 1290 it was granted by Philip the Fair to Charles, king of Sicily, and in 1348 passed from the crown of Sicily by sale into the hands of the popes, who retained possession of it till the French revolution.

Ecclesiastical History of Avignon.

Avignon was the seat of the popes during the schism in the Romish church, from 1307 to 1397, whence the Italians call it the Babylonish Captivity of the Holy See. Several councils were also held here, as in 1060, by Hugh de Cluni, legate of Nicholas II; in 1088, when Aicard, archbishop of Arles, was excommunicated; in 1326, and in 1337, to regulate ecclesiastical discipline; and in 1457 respecting the crusades.

AVIGNON, Nicolas d' (Biog.) a monk of Avignon, of the order of preaching friars, had the credit in the Romish church of being able to work miracles.

AVILA, Louis d' (Hist.) a Spanish gentleman in the service of Charles the Fifth, who was sent as ambassador to the popes Paul IV and Pius V, and was afterwards a commander at the siege of Metz. He likewise wrote some historical memoirs of the wars of Charles V against the Protestants of Germany, entitled 'Los Comentarios de la Guerra del Emperador Carlos V. contra los Protestantes de Alemania,' first printed in 1546, and afterwards translated into French and Latin. He also wrote Memoirs of the War in Africa. Thuan. Hist. l. 4.

AVILA, John d' (Ecc.) a Spanish priest, who acquired the surname of the Apostle of Andalusia, from the zeal and efficacy with which he preached the gospel, being instrumental in the conversion of some, who were afterwards enrolled among the saints, as S. Francis de Borgia, &c. He died in 1569, leaving many works on spiritual subjects.

AVILA, Sancho d', son of the marquis de Velada, was born in 1546, and died bishop of Placenza, in 1625, leaving some works of piety.

AVILA, Joseph Maria, a Spanish dominican, was appointed by Leo X to the bishopric of Campagna, in the kingdom of Naples; and after governing his church with distinguished zeal, he died of the plague, in 1657, while administering to the spiritual comforts of others who were dying.

AVILA, Giles Gonçales d', (Biog.) historiographer to the king of Spain, in 1612, died at the age of 80, in 1668. He wrote, 1. 'Theatro de las Grandegas de Madrid.' 2. 'Theatro Ecclesiastico de las Iglesias de las Indias'; besides a History of the Antiquities of Salamanca, and a Life of Henry III, king of Castile, &c.

AVILER, Augustine Charles d' (Biog.) an architect, descended from a family originally of Nanci, in Lorraine, was born at Paris in 1653, and died in 1700. He was captured by the Algerines in 1674, and, notwithstanding the exertions of Louis XIV in his favour, and in favour of the celebrated antiquary John Foi Vaillant, he did not obtain his liberty until two years after; during which time he conciliated the favour of the dey by the display of his art. He afterwards erected a triumphal arc at Montpellier, in honour of his patron. His works, as an author, are 1. 'Œuvres d'Architecture de Vincent de Scamozzi,' translated from the Italian, fol. Paris, 1685; Leyden, 1713. 2. 'Cours d'Architecture qui comprend les Ordres de Vignole, avec des Commentaires et plusieurs Nouveaux Dessins,' 2 vols. 4to. Paris, 1691; a third edition in 1699, and again in 1710, 1720, 1738. The later edition is the best, because it contains the lives of Aviler and Vignola, by Mariette.

AURUNCE (Myth.) an ancient town of Latium, built by Auson, the son of Ulysses and Calypso. Virg. Æn. l. 7; Plin. l. 3.

AUSCII (Geog.) Augusta Ausciorum, or Ausciorum civitas, a town of Aquitania, now Auch or Ausch.

AUSONIA (Geog.) an ancient name of Italy, derived, as is said, from Auson, the son of Ulysses and Calypso.

AUSONIUS, S. (Ecc.) first bishop of Angoulême, who is supposed to have suffered martyrdom in the third or fourth century.

AUSONIUS, Decius Magnus (Hist.) eldest son of Julius Ausonius, mentioned under Biography, a poet of Bourdeaux, and a Roman consul, was preceptor to Gratian, the son of Valentinian, the emperor, by whom he was distinguished with many marks of favour, and elevated to the dignity of the consulship in 379. The time of his death is not exactly known, but it is certain that he was living in 392. His works, which consist of epigrams, idyls, and poetical epistles, &c. have long been admired for their spirit and elegance, although objectionable in some parts on the score of indelicacy. The best editions are that of Tollius, 8vo. Lugd. Bat. 1671; and that of Jaubert, with a French translation, 4 vols. 12mo. Paris, 1769.

AUSONIUS, Julius (Biog.) father of the poet Ausonius, a physician and senator at Rome and Bourdeaux, was born at Bazas, in Aquitania, about 287, and died at the age of 90. His praises are celebrated by his son, who represents him as a distinguished practitioner in his day. He left some works on medicine, which are not now extant.

AUSSONE, William d' (Ecc.) or Auroni, son of John I, count of Avines, in Hainault, was chosen bishop of Cambrai in 1330, and in 1344 bishop of Autun. During his government of Cambrai, it withstood the siege which Edward III laid to it in 1338.

AUSSUN, Peter d' (Hist.) a knight of the Order of St. Michael, and a celebrated captain in the 16th century, was descended from an ancient and noble family of Bisorre. He died of mortification at being defeated at the battle of Dreux, in 1562, after having been engaged in honourable service for 40 years.

AUSTERLITZ (Geog.) a small town of Moravia, in the circle of Brunn, 12 m. E. S. E. Brunn. This town was nearly raised to the ground in the 17th century; and in 1805 was the theatre of a dreadful battle between the French and the united force of Austria and Russia, in which the latter were defeated with great slaughter.

AUSTREGILDE (Hist.) surnamed Bobile, was married to Gontran, king of Burgundy, in 566, after he had repudiated his queen Mercatrude. Grægor. Tur. l. 5.

AUSTREGESILUS (Ecc.) archbishop of Bourges, died in 624.

AUSTREMOINES, St. (Ecc.) one of the seven illustrious missionaries who were sent into Gaul in 250. He settled at Auvergne, where, according to Gregory of Tours, he died in peace, although later accounts give him the honour of being a martyr. Greg. Tur. Hist. l. 2; Tillemont. Mem.

AUSTRIA (Geog.) a country of Germany, which was the Upper Pannonia of the ancients, and derives its modern name from the Teutonic, Æsterich; in high German, Æsterreich; that is, the eastern kingdom, because it is one of the most eastern provinces of the empire.

Boundaries and Extent. The circle of Austria is the largest of the 10 circles into which the empire of Germany is divided, and is bounded on the E. by Hungary, S. by Italy and Croatia, W. by Switzerland, and N. by Suabia, Bohemia, and Moravia.

Division. It contains the archduchy of Austria, otherwise called Austria Proper, or the hereditary states of the house of Austria; the duchies of Stiria, Carinthia, and Carniola; the county of Tyrol, and the principalities of Buxen, Trent, &c. The archduchy of Austria is divided by the river Ens into Upper and Lower.

Principal Towns. Vienna, the capital of the German empire, is in Upper Austria, and the other principal cities are Kremps, Lentz, Ens, Neustadt, Steira, &c.

Principal Rivers. The rivers, besides the Danube, are the Ens, Inn, Drave, and Save.

History. Austria was erected into a marquisate by Otho I, in favour of his brother in law Leopold, surnamed the Illustrious; who after having repulsed the Hungarians very frequently, died in 983. His successors were Albert I, Henry I, Leopold II, Leopold III, Albert II, Ernest, Leopold IV, and Leopold V, surnamed the Holy, who died in 1136. Austria was then erected into a duchy by the emperor Frederic Barbarossa in 1156, in favour of Henry II, son of the afore-mentioned Leopold V. On the death of Frederic I, one of his successors in 1230, Austria was seized by Ottogar, king of Bohemia, but he being killed by Rudolphus I, founder of the house of Austria, at the battle of Vienna, in 1278, this duchy came into his family and was raised by the emperor Frederic IV into an archduchy in favour of his son Maximilian I, at his marriage in 1477. The princes of Austria were for many centuries emperors of Germany until 1804, when Francis II renounced this title and erected his own dominions into an hereditary empire. The dominions comprehended under the Austrian empire are at present the circle of Austria; Bohemia; Moravia; Austrian Silesia; Galicia; Hungary, including Transylvania, Sclavonia, and Austrian Croatia; the Venetian territories, including Istria, Dalmatia, with Cattaro, Ragusa, and Lombardy; the Duchy of Ferrara; and the Lordships of Valteline, &c.

AUSTRIA, House of (Hist.) an illustrious house which has furnished a succession of emperors to Germany, besides five kings to Spain, and other distinguished characters. [Vide Germany and Spain] It was founded by Rudolph, count of Habsburg, whose merit raised him to the dignity of the empire in 1273; but of his family previous to himself, nothing certain is known.

AUT

AUTELS, William des (Biog.) a French and Latin poet, descended from a respectable family at Charolles, was born in 1529, and died about 1580. Some of his poems have obtained a place in the 'Delicie Poetarum Gallorum,' 1609; besides which he wrote a treatise on the French language, entitled 'Traité touchant l'Ancienne Ecriture de la Langue Françoisse et de sa Poesie,' 16mo. Lyons; which caused some controversy in his day.

AUTEROCHE (Biog.) vide Chappe.

AUTHON, John d' (Biog.) or Auton, historiographer of France under Louis XII, died in 1523, or, according to some, in 1527. He wrote the history of France, from 1490 to 1508; the first four years of which was published in 4to. in 1620, by Theodore Godefroi, and the two last which had appeared in 4to. in 1615, with 'l'Histoire de Louis XII;' the three others remain unpublished in the imperial library. To his pen are ascribed likewise, 1. 'Les Epistres envoyées au Roy par les Etats de France,' &c. 4to. Lyons, 1509. 2. 'L'Exil de Gennes le Superbe,' &c. 4to. 1508.

AUTREAU, James d' (Biog.) a painter and a poet of Paris, died in the hospital of Incurables in 1745. He wrote comedies and tragedies which have both been performed with applause on the theatres of France and Italy. Among the comedies, the principal are 'Port à l'Anglais,' 'Democrite pretendu Fou;' among the tragedies are 'Clorinda,' 'Chevalier Bayard,' &c. all of which were collected in 4 vols. 12mo. in 1749. The most known of the pictures of this painter is that of Diogenes with a lanthorn in his hand, in search of an honest man and finding him in the person of the cardinal de Fleury.

AUTRONIUS, Pætus (Hist.) a consul and colleague of Sylla, who being accused of bribery, was condemned as incapable of holding any public office. After joining Cataline in his conspiracy, he fled into Greece. Cic. ad Attic. l. 3, ep. 2; Sallust. Cat. c. 17, &c.; Sueton. in Cæs. c. 9; Dio. l. 36.

AUX

AUTUN (Geog.) one of the most ancient towns of France, in the province of Burgundy, and the modern department of the Loire, 16 m. S. W. Dijon, and 65 S. E. Paris.

History of Autun.

Autun was celebrated among the Romans under the names of Ædua and Augustodunum, in honour of Augustus, from which the present name was contracted. The Druids had their senate here, and the young Gauls their school, until the irruptions of the barbarians. It was ruined by Attila in 451, pillaged by the Normans in the 9th century; and besieged by Childbert and Clotarius, sons of Clovis the Great. After which it bore the title of a county, and suffered much during the civil wars in 1562. In consequence of these repeated misfortunes, Autun was reduced to comparative insignificance, and has not since materially recovered its importance.

Ecclesiastical History of Autun.

Autun was a bishop's see, suffragan of Lyons; and its bishop was one of the most powerful in the kingdom, being ex officio, president of the states of Burgundy. His diocese comprehended 611 parishes, and 13 abbeys. Many councils were held in this city, the principal of which was that in 1094, wherein the incestuous marriage of Philip I was condemned. Masson. Descript. Flum. Gall. Saint. Marth. Gall. Christ; Du Chêne Hist. de Bourg.

AUVERGNE (Geog.) a province in the heart of France, which at the Revolution was divided into the departments of the Puy de Dome, in Lower Auvergne; and the Cantal, in Upper Auvergne. It derives its name from the ancient Averni, who are celebrated in the Roman history, particularly in the wars of Cæsar. It was taken from the Romans by the Goths in 419, from whose hands Clovis wrested it in 507. It was afterwards converted into a county, and belonged principally to the counts of Boulogne. Councils were held in Auvergne in 535, 549, and 586. Gregor. Tur. l. 6, c. 38; Voss. Not. Gall.

AUVERGNE, Martial d' (Biog.) a poet and historian, wrote in French verse the history of Charles VII, under the title of 'Les Vigiles du Roi Charles VII.'

AUVERGNE, Antony d', a musician and composer of Clermont, in Auvergne, was born in 1713, and died in 1797, leaving among his best compositions 'Te Deum,' 'De Profundis,' and 'Miserere,' besides the operas 'Canente,' 'Les Amours de Tempe,' &c.

AUVIGNY, N. Castres d' (Biog.) an officer of Hainault, was killed at the battle of Dettingen, leaving a History of Paris. 5 vols. 12mo. of which he wrote the three first volumes, and half of the fourth; the eight first volumes of the Lives of Illustrious Men of France, &c. The ninth and tenth were published by his brother.

AUXENTIUS (Ecc.) an Arian usurper of the episcopal see of Milan, was excommunicated in a council held in 368, but continued to hold the see till 374, when he was succeeded by S. Ambrosius. S. Hilar. cont. Aurent.; Baron. Annal. 353.

AUXENTIUS the Younger, offered to dispute with S. Ambrosius on the question of the Arian heresy, but the latter refused to admit princes or secular persons to be judges of the contest. S. Ambros. Orat. in Auxent.; S. Hieron. in Chron.; Socrat. l. 4; Baronius, &c.

AUXENTIUS, a bishop of Mopsueste, in Celicia, in the fourth century.

AUXENTIUS, S., a native of Persia, who fled from the persecutions of Sapor, and died in 463 or 470, after leading the life of a hermit.

AUXERRE (Geog.) an ancient town of Burgundy, in France.

in the modern department of the Yonne, situated on the left bank of the river Yonne, 75 m. W. N. W. Dijon, and 90 S. S. E. Paris, lon. 3° 34' E., lat. 47° 48' N.

History of Auxerre.

It was known formerly by a variety of names, as Autricum, Antissiodorum, Allissiodorum, Alliodorum, &c. Ammi-anus Marcellinus mentions this city as the place where Julian the Apostate stopped to refresh his army. It was afterwards taken and almost ruined by Attila; and in 732 it was pillaged by the Saracens. King Robert took it in 1005, the English pillaged it in 1358, and the Hugonots in 1567. In the mean time it was successively under its own counts, or immediately attached to the crown of France.

Ecclesiastical History of Auxerre.

Auxerre is a bishop's see suffragan of Sens, the first bishop of which was S. Peregrin, the martyr, in 258; who had among his successors, S. Germain Optatus, William, of Auxerre; the cardinals Peter de Mortemar, Talleyrand des Perigord, Robert and Philip de Lenonecourt, Philibert Babou de la Bourdaisiere, &c. Κισσοκόμην Διόνυσον ἐρίβρομον ἀρχοῦν αἰδαῖν Ζητὸς καὶ Σεμέλῃ ἐρικυδέος ἀγλαὸν Διόν.

He is said to have been saved out of the flames which consumed his mother, and to have been cherished in the thigh of Jupiter till the proper time of his birth, whence he is called bimater.

Ovid. Met. l. 3.

Imperfectus adhuc infans genetricis ab alro
Eripitur, patrioque tener, si credere dignum est,
Insuitur femori, maturnaque tempora complet.

Theocrit. Idyl. 26.

Χαίροι μὲν Διόνυσος, ὃν ἐν Δρακὸν ἠνιόχοντι
Ζεὺς ὑπάτος μέγαν ἐπιγυνίδα θήκατο λύσας.

But different accounts have been given of Bacchus, and the same name also given to several deities. He was the Osiris of the Egyptians, from whom the fables respecting him were taken by the Greeks, who worshipped him as the god of wine, and in honour of whom annual feasts were celebrated among the ancients, called Orgies, Bacchanalia, Dionysia, &c. [Vide Bacchus, under Numismatics] Hom. II. l. 6; Herodot. l. 1, c. 150; Euripid. in Bacch.; Apollod. l. 1; Aral. in Phenom.; Diodor. l. 1; *Hygin. was very commonly crowned with ivy, as may be particularly seen in fig. 2, and also with a garland of vine-leaves, or vine-tendrils, and sometimes with laurel. On a few meduls he is to be seen with two horns, as in fig. 6, and sometimes with one, according to the epithet cornifer, which was sometimes given him. For the most part he was beardless, but occasionally, as in figs. 2 and 5, he was depicted with a beard. His postures and situations are also various, for the most part standing, sometimes on a low stone or pillar, as in fig. 3, sometimes on the mystic chest, employed in the celebration of the orgies, as in fig. 7, which was drawn by tigers or panthers, as in fig. 8; and frequently he is represented in a chariot, drawn by tigers or panthers, as by two centaurs, as in fig. 9; where, as the god Osiris of the Egyptians, he is in the same chariot with Isis, who is distinguished by the modus on her head. The boy Cissus goes before exulting; Cupid on the left of Isis bearing a torch in his right hand; Satyrs and Pans attending with their horns. These two latter modes of representing Bacchus alluded to his victories in India. The ordinary symbols of Bacchus were the thyrsus, the cantharus, or cuphus, the ivy, vine, and bunch of grapes, the tiger or panther, satyrs, fawns, &c. most of which may be seen in the above figures. Bacchus is not unfrequently styled κτιστής, i. e. fundator, on medals of Nicæa or Tiane, &c., as ΔΙΟΝΥΚΟΚ ΚΤΙΣΤΗΣ ΝΙΚΑΙΕΙΣ, &c., or σωτήρ, salvator, as ΔΙΟΝΥΣΟΥ ΣΩΤΗΡΟΣ ΜΑΡΩΝΙΤΩΝ. In Latin inscriptions he is distinguished by the title LIBER PATER, as in fig. 4. Vaill. Num. Gr.; Tristan. Comment. Hist. tom. ii.; Beg. Thes. Brand. tom. i. et iii.; Spanh. Dissert.; Seg. Sel. Numm.

BACCHYLIDES (Biog.) a Greek lyric poet, the cotemporary and rival of Pindar, was the author of odes, proodes, hymns, &c., of which there are some fragments still in being, printed with those of Alcæus, at the end of an edition of Pindar, 16mo. 1567. *Amnian. History of Bagdad.

Bagdad was built by the caliph Al Mansur, in the year of the Hegira 145, A. D. 755; by whom, as well as by his successors, it was made a constant place of residence. It was stormed by the Tartar prince Holaku, the grandson of Jenghis Khan, in the year of the Hegira 656, A. D. 1266; who put the caliph Al Mostasem to death, and abolished the caliphate. His posterity were expelled by Tamerlane in 1416, and in 1436 by Kara Yusef. In the following century Shah Ismael, the first of the royal Persian house of Sofi, made himself master of it, since which time it has been a constant object of contention between the Turks and Persians. In 1688 it surrendered to the grand seignior Amurath, after sustaining a tedious siege, and continues to this day in the hands of the Turks; although an attempt was made by Nadir Shah to recover it, in which he failed.

BAKER, the present name of an ancient family in the neighbourhood of Bridgenorth, co. Salop, which formerly bore the name of Littlehales. Sir Edward Baker Littlehales, a descendant of this family, and a lieutenant-colonel in the army, was, for various services, civil and military, created a baronet in 1802, and received in 1817 the royal sign manual that he may assume and take the surname of Baker only. The arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Arms. Argent, on a bend cottised sable, three cinque-foils or, a chief gules, charged with three arrows erect point downwards proper.

Crest. Between two wings elevated or, an armed arm embowed proper, garnished or; the hand in a gauntlet grasping an arrow entwined by a branch of olive proper.

Motto. "Finis coronat opus."

BAKER, David (Biog.) an English Benedictine, was born in 1575, educated at Oxford, and intended for the bar; but, being reclaimed from infidel principles, he attached himself to the Romish church, in which faith he died in 1641. He wrote a great many religious treatises, to the number of nine large folio volumes, which were long preserved in the nunnery at Cambray; but his principal work was an Ecclesiastical History, which is lost.

BAKER, Sir Richard, grandson of the sir John Baker before-mentioned under History, was born at Sissinghurst, in Kent, about 1568, entered a commoner of Hart-hall, Oxford, in 1584, created A. M. in 1594, knighted by king James I in 1603, made high-sheriff of the county of Oxford in 1620; and having become surety for some of his wife's family, he was thereby reduced to poverty, and thrown into the Fleet, where he died in 1645. He is principally known by his 'Chronicle of the Kings of England, from the Time of the Roman Government unto the Death of King James,' fol. London, 1641, 1653, and 1658, to which last edition was added the Reign of Charles I, by Edward Phillips, the nephew of Milton. A fourth edition was continued down to the coronation of Charles II, and a subsequent edition in 1733 has been carried down to the end of George I. He wrote likewise other works, as 1. 'Cato Variiegatus,' Lond. 1636. 2. 'Meditations and Disquisitions on the Lord's Prayer,' 4to. London, 1637; the fourth edition of which was printed in 1640. 3. 'Meditations on the Fiftieth Psalm,' &c. 4to. London, 1639, 1640. 4. 'Theatrum Redivivum,' in answer to Mr. Prynne's Histrio-matrix, &c. 8vo. London, 1662, &c.

BAKER, Thomas, a mathematician, was born in 1625, entered of Magdalen-hall, Oxford, in 1640, elected scholar of Wadham in 1645; and, after having served the king during his stay in the garrison at Oxford, he became vicar of Bishop's Nymmet, in Devonshire, where he died in 1690. His principal work was 'The Geometrical Key,' or the Gate of Equations unlocked, &c. 4to. London, 1684. in Latin and English.

BAKER, Thomas, grandson of Sir George Baker, the loyalist, was born in 1656, admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, in 1674, took his degrees in 1677 and 1681, and died in 1740, after having been deprived of his rectory for refusing to read king James II's declaration for liberty of conscience, and afterwards of his fellowship for refusing to take the oaths; of which deprivations he left memorials by writing in all his books 'Ejectus Rector,' or 'Socius ejectus.' 'Reflections on Learning,' which passed through eight editions; and his Preface to Bishop Fisher's Funeral Sermon for Margaret, countess of Richmond and Derby, 1708, were the only works of his which were published; but he left 39 volumes, folio, and 3 vols. 4to. of MSS., consisting of Collections towards a History of St. John's College, and the Antiquities of Cambridge, which are preserved in the British Museum, and at Cambridge.

BAKER, Henry, a naturalist, was born in 1698, and died in 1774, after having employed the greater part of his life in teaching deaf and dumb persons to speak. His works, as an author, are, 1. 'Universal Spectator,' 4 vols. 12mo. 1728. 2. 'Medulla Poetarum Romanarum,' 2 vols. 8vo. 3. 'The Microscope made Easy,' 1742, which went through six editions. 4. 'Employment for the Microscope,' the second edition of which appeared in 1764: besides some poems, as his 'Invocation to Health;' and his 'Original Poems, Serious and Humorous,' part the first and second, 8vo. 1725 and 1726. Mr. Baker had two sons, David Erskine and Henry. The former published 'The Companion to the Playhouse,' 2 vols. 12mo. 1764, which was afterwards published in an improved form under the title of 'Biographia Dramatica.' The younger son, Henry, published 'Essays Pastoral and Elegiac;' and left ready for the press a work more suited to his profession as a lawyer, entitled 'The Clerk to the Commission,' or a Collection of Statutes, &c. relative to Bankruptcy. Both these sons died before their father.

BAKER, Sir George, the baronet mentioned under Heraldry, was born in 1722, educated at Eton, entered a scholar of King's college, Cambridge, in 1742, took his degrees in 1745 and 1749, and died in 1809, physician in ordinary to the king, and physician to the queen. He wrote, 1. 'De Affectibus Animi, et Morbis inde oriundis, Dissertatio habita Cantabrigiæ in Scholis Publicis,' 5 Kal. Feb. 1755, 4to. London, 1755. 2. 'Oratio ex Harveii Instituto, habita in Theatro Coll. Reg. Medicorum,' &c. 4to. London. 1761. 3. 'De Catarro et de Dysenteria Londinensi, Epidemici utrisque Anno 1762, Libellus,' 4to. Ibid. 1763. 4. 'An Inquiry into the Merits of a Method of inoculating the Small-pox,' &c. 8vo. Ibid. 1766. 5. 'An Essay concerning the Cause of the Endemial Colic of Devonshire.'

BAKER, William, an author and printer, was born in 1742, and died in 1785, leaving, among other things, two small works; namely, 1. 'Peregrinations of the Mind through the most general and interesting Subjects which are usually agitated in Life, by the Rationalist,' 12mo. 1770. 2. 'Theses Græcæ et Latine Selectæ,' 8vo. 1780.

BALBOA, Vasco Nuges de (Hist.) a Castilian adventurer, who distinguished himself by the discovery of the South Sea, and the coast of Darien, where he built a town; after which his enemies, jealous of his success, brought a charge of felony against him, for which he was tried, and being found guilty, was beheaded at the age of 42, in 1517.

BALBUENA, Bernard de (Ecc.) bishop of Porto Rico, in North America, died in 1627, leaving the reputation of being one of the best poets of Spain. He wrote, 1. 'El Bernardo o Victoria de Roncesvalles,' 4to. Madrid, 1624. 2. 'Siccle d'Or dans les Bois d'Eriphile,' 8vo. Madrid, 1608.

BALBUS (Hist.) a name common to many distinguished Romans.

BALBUS, Lucius Cornelius, a consul, U. C. 714, A. C. 40, who, though a native of Cadiz, yet, supported by his friends, among whom he reckoned Cicero, Pompey, and Caesar, and aided by his own merit, he withstood all opposition, and succeeded to the consulship. He attached himself to Caesar, of whose actions he wrote an account. Cic. pro Balb. et ad Attic. l. 8, c. 9; Vell. Pater. l. 2; Plin. l. 7, c. 43; Dio. c. 48.

BALBUS, Cornelius, nephew of the preceding, who conquered the Garamantes, was the first foreigner who was honoured with a triumph. This Balbus was called Minor, to distinguish him from his uncle, who was called Major. Cic. de Fam. l. 10, ep. 32; Plin. l. 5; Sueton. in August. c. 29; Dio. c. 54.

BALBUS, Peter (Ecc.) a descendant from one of the first families in Venice, and kinsman of pope Pius II, by whom he was employed on different occasions, died bishop of Tropea, in 1479. He translated many of the Greek fathers into Latin, as Gregorius Nazianzenus, Joannes Chrysostomus, Gregorius Nyssenus, &c.

BALBUS, Lucius Lucilius (Biog.) a lawyer, the disciple of Mutius Scaevola, and the preceptor to Servius Sulpitius. Cic. in Brut. c. 42.

BALBUS, the name of two stoics, mentioned by Cicero. Cic. Orat. l. 3, c. 21; De Nat. Deor. l. 1.

BALCARRAS, Alexander (Hist.) second Lord, and first Earl of the family mentioned under Heraldry, had the command of a troop of horse on the side of the Scotch covenants, when general Baillie was defeated by Montrose; but he afterwards joined in the attempt to rescue the king; was at the battle of Worcester, on the side of king Charles II, whom he afterwards joined at Paris, and died at Breda in 1659.

BALCARRAS, Colin, third Earl of, was high in the favour and confidence of king James II, and suffered a long imprisonment on his behalf, after the flight of that monarch. On his release he engaged in the plot for the restoration of James, set on foot by sir James Montgomery; and on its discovery, in 1690, he retired to the exiled king, but obtaining leave to return, after an absence of ten years, he died in 1722, at the age of 70, after having favoured the exertions which were made in 1715 in favour of prince Charles. He wrote 'An Account of the Affairs of Scotland, relating to the Revolution in 1688,' published in 1714.

BALCARRAS, Alexander, fourth Earl of, distinguished himself in all the battles and sieges in Flanders, and died in 1736.

BALCARRAS, James, fifth Earl of, and brother of the preceding, was engaged with his father on the side of prince Charles; but, although reluctantly embarked in the concern, he behaved so gallantly at the battle of Sheriff-Muir, that he and his companions received the thanks of the earl of Marr on the field. He went abroad on the unsuccessful termination of this affair; but, obtaining permission to return, he died in 1768, in the 77th year of his age.

BALCARRAS, Earl of (Her.) one of the titles belonging to the ancient family of Lindsay. Sir David Lindsay was created lord Lindsay in 1663, when Charles I visited Scotland; and Alexander, the second lord, was created earl of Balcarras, in 1651. The titles, arms, &c. of this family are as follow:

Titles. Lindsay, earl of Balcarras, co. Fife, and lord Lindsay, of Cumbernauld.

Arms. Quarterly, 1st and 4th gules, a fess cheque argent and azure for Lindsay. 2d and 3d or, a lion rampant gules, surmounted of a ribbon sable, for Abernethy.

BALDI, de Ubaldo (Biog.) or Baldus, a celebrated lawyer, and native of Perugia, died in 1400, leaving many works on civil law, &c.

BALDI, or Baldus Bernard, was born at Urbino in 1586, and died abbot of Guastalla in 1617. He wrote, 1. 'De Tormentis Bellicis et eorum Inventoribus.' 2. 'Commentaria in Mechanica Aristotelis,' 1582. 3. 'De Verborum Vitruvianorum Significatione.' 4. 'Novæ Gnomonice Lib. V,' 1595. 5. 'Vitæ Mathematicorum,' &c. 6. 'Versi e Prosi.'

BALDI, or Balde James, vide Baldc.

BALDINGER, Ernest Gottfried (Biog.) a physician of Erfurt, was born in 1738, and died in 1804. Among his numerous works on the subject of his profession, are, 1. 'A Treatise on the Diseases of the Army,' 8vo. 1774. 2. 'A Magazine for Physicians,' 3 vols. 1779—1799. 3. 'Sylloge Opusculorum Selectorum Argumenti Medico-pract.' 4to. Gottingen. 1776—1782. 4. A German Edition of Boerner's Lives of Physicians.

BALDINI, Bernardin (Biog.) a mathematician, physician, and poet, died in 1601, at Milan. He wrote, among other things, 1. 'Regola di misurar il Comino fatto da Naviganti,' &c. 2. 'De Multitudine Rerum,' &c. 3. 'In Pestilentiam Libellus,' &c.

BALDINI, John Anthony, an Italian count, was born at Placentia in 1654, and died in 1725. He is known rather as the patron of learning and learned men than as an author, having left nothing, as far as is known, but a Discourse on the Maps, in the 'Atlas Historique,' published at Amsterdam in 1719.

BALDINI, John Francis, an Italian antiquary, was born in 1677, and died in 1765. His works, which are in Italian, are, 1. 'Sopra le Forze Moventi.' 2. 'Relazione dell'Aurora Boreale veduta in Rome,' 1737, both inserted in 'Calogera Opusculis Philologis.' 3. 'Dissertazione sopra certi Vasetti di Creta trovati in una Camera Sepolcrale, nella Vigna di S. Cesario, in Roma.' 4. 'Dissertazione sopra un' Antica Piastra di Bronzo, che si suppone un' Orologio da Sole;' these two are inserted in 'Saggi de Dissertazioni di Cortona,' Vol. II and III. Besides an edition of Vailant's 'Numismata Imp. Roman.' which he published in 4to. Rom. 1743.

BALDINUCCI, Philip (Biog.) a biographer, was born in 1624, and died in 1696. He wrote the Lives of the Painters; three volumes of which were published in his life-time, and three more after his death; and a new edition of the whole in 1731. He also published in Italian a Treatise on Engraving, in 4to. 1686.

BALDO (Biog.) Baldi, or Balilius, a native of Florence, and physician to pope Innocent X, published, among other things, 1. 'Prælectio de Contagione Pestifera,' 4to. Rom. 1631. 2. 'Disquisitio Iatrophysica de Aëre,' 4to. Rom. 1637. 3. 'De Loco affecto in Pleuritide Disceptationes,' 8vo. Paris. 1640; et Rom. 1643, &c.

BALDOC, Robert de, an ecclesiastic, who shared the misfortunes of Edward II, and died in Newgate.

BALDOCK, Ralph de (Ecc.) bishop of London in 1303, and chancellor to Edward I, died in 1313, leaving, 1. 'Historia Anglica,' which is lost, though Leland says that he saw it. 2. 'A Collection of the Statutes and Constitutions of the Church of St. Paul's,' extant in the library of that cathedral in 1559, but now lost.

BALDOVINI, Francis, a poet of Florence, was born in 1654, and died in 1716. His chief work is a poem of the pastoral kind, entitled 'Il Lamento de Cecco da Varlungo,' published in 1694, and again in 1755, with the author's life by Manni. In 1800 it was rendered into English by John Hunter, esq. under the title of 'Cecco's Complaint,' 8vo.

BALDUCCI, Francis (Biog.) an Italian poet, who died in 1642, or according to some, in 1645, and even 1649; wrote, 1. 'Tributo di Parnasso alla Muesta Cesareo di Ferdinando III d'Austria,' 4to. Rome, 1638. 2. 'La Pace Urbana,' 4to. Naples, 1632. 3. 'Poesie degli Accademici Fantastici di Roma,' Rome, 1637. 4. 'Rime, Parte Prima,' 12mo. BALDUS (Biog.) vide Baldi and Baldo.

BALDWIN (Hist.) the name of several princes.

Emperors of Constantinople.

BALDWIN I, count of Flanders, was elected during the crusades emperor of the East, when Constantinople was captured in 1204 by the French and Venetians. Being taken prisoner in 1205 by the Bulgarians, he was put to death after a confinement of 16 months.

BALDWIN II, the last Latin emperor of Constantinople, was raised to the throne in 1228, but after a stormy reign of 33 years, he fled from his Greek rival Michael Paleologus in 1261, and took refuge in Italy, where he died in 1273.

Kings of Jerusalem.

BALDWIN I, succeeded his brother Godfrey de Bouillon, count of Boulogne, on the throne of Jerusalem in 1100, and died in 1118, after having conquered Antipatris, Casarea, Azotus, and Acre.

BALDWIN II, son of Hugh, count of Rethel, succeeded to the throne in 1118, and died in the 13th year of his reign; during which time he was successful against the Saracens, although he was once taken prisoner.

BALDWIN III, son of Folkes, of Angou, succeeded his father in 1143, and died in 1163, after having taken Ascalon, and beaten the Saracens several times.

BALDWIN IV, succeeded his father Amaury in 1174, but being a leper, the government was administered by Raymond count de Tripoli. He defeated the Sultan Saladin, when he attempted to take Jerusalem by surprise in 1177, and died in 1185.

BALDWIN V, nephew of the preceding, was crowned by his uncle in 1183, when he was only five or seven years old, and did not survive him above a year, being poisoned; as is supposed, by his mother Sibylla, that the throne might devolve to her second husband Guy de Lusignan.

Counts of Flanders.

BALDWIN I, son of Odonere, grand forester of Flanders, obtained the government of this country as its first count from Charles the Bald, whose daughter Judith he had run away with and married. He died in 877. Mir. Annal. Belg.; Meyer. Annal. Fland.; Flodoard. Annal. de S. Bertin, &c. l. 3, c. 12.

BALDWIN II, surnamed of Jerusalem, son of the preceding, succeeded his father in 898, and died in 918. Miræus; Meyer; Flodoard, &c.

BALDWIN III, surnamed the Younger, son of Arnold I, began to reign in 958, and died in 961.

BALDWIN IV, son of Arnold II, succeeded in 989, and died in 1034, after having taken Valenciennes and some other places. He was, however, at one period despoiled of his estates by his own son, but recovered them again by the assistance of the duke of Normandy.

BALDWIN V, son and successor of the preceding, was reckoned one of the greatest princes of his age, notwithstanding his ambition had hurried him into excesses against his father. He conquered the Frieslanders, obtained Valenciennes, Ghent, Alost, and many other places in fief from the emperor Henry IV; founded a collegiate church at Lisle, at Aire, and at Harlebeck, and after the death of Henry I, king of France, he was honoured with the guardianship of the young king Philip I, which trust he executed with great probity, and died in 1067.

BALDWIN VI, son and successor of Baldwin V, died after a short reign in 1070. He became also count of Hainault in right of his countess Richilda, daughter of Rainier VI, count of Hainault.

BALDWIN VII, succeeded his father Robert II in 1111, and died in 1119 of the wounds he received in the attack of a little castle in Normandy, while engaged in a war with Henry I, king of England. Alberic. in Chron.; Sigeb. in Chron.; Order. Vit. &c.

BALDWIN VIII, surnamed the Courageous, succeeded to the county of Hainault in 1171, and to that of Flanders in 1191, and died in 1195.

BALDWIN IX, son and successor of the preceding, was also emperor of Constantinople. [Vide Baldwin I]

Counts of Hainault.

BALDWIN I, was the same as Baldwin VI, count of Flanders. [Vide Baldwin VI]

BALDWIN II, son and successor of the preceding, was despoiled of the greater part of his states by his uncle Robert, the Frieslander, and was afterwards killed in the Holy Land in 1098.

BALDWIN III, his son and successor, died young in 1433.

BALDWIN IV, surnamed the Builder, from his attachment to building, succeeded his father in 1133, and died in 1171, after having reduced the inhabitants of Valenciennes to obedience, and maintained a war against Thierry, count of Flanders, who was leagued with other princes.

BALDWIN IV, the same as Baldwin VIII, count of Flanders.

BALDWIN (Ecc.) a native of Exeter, and archbishop of Canterbury, crowned Richard I in 1189, and attending this king to the Holy Land, died at the siege of Acre in 1191. His principal works were 'Of the Sacrament and of the Altar;' 'Faith Recommended;' 'Of Orthodox Opinions;' 'Of Heretical Sects;' 'Concerning the History of Kings;' 'In Praise of Virginity,' &c. These were collected and published by Bertrand Tissier, in 1662.

BALDWIN, or Baldwinus Rithovius Martin, first bishop of Ypres, was at the celebrated conference of Worms in 1557, and at the council of Trent in 1562, and died in 1583.

BALDWIN (Biog.) vide Baudoin.

BALDWIN, William, an author in the 16th century, who studied at Oxford, and wrote. 1. 'A Treatise of Moral Philosophy,' 1547, and 1550. 2. 'The Canticles, or Balades of Solomon,' &c. 4to. 1549. 3. 'The Funerals of King Edward VI,' 4to. 1560. 4. 'The Mirror of Magistrates.'

BALDWIN, Francis, a lawyer of Arras, who died in 1573 in the Catholic faith, although he is said to have changed his profession four times. He wrote among other things 'Leges de Re Rustica,' &c.

BAILE, John (Ecc.) a follower of Wickliff, who raised a sedition in 1381, and after having caused great slaughter and tumult, was taken at Coventry, and executed at St. Alban's.

BALE, John, in Latin Baleus, or Baleus, bishop of Ossory, in Ireland, was born in 1495 in the Romish religion, which he renounced for Protestantism, was promoted to the see of Ossory by Edward VI, but obliged to fly the kingdom in the reign of queen Mary. He was afterwards made a prebendary in the cathedral of Canterbury, where he died in 1668. He is principally known as a biographer, whose work, under the title of 'Illustrium Majoris Britanniae Scriptorum, hoc est, Anglie et Scotie Summarum,' was first published in 4to. Ipswich, 1549; containing only five centuries of writers; to which were added four centuries more, which with corrections were printed in fol. Basil. 1559. To him are ascribed several other works under the name of Harrison, as, 1. 'The Actes of English Votaries, comprehending their Unchaste Practices,' &c. 8vo. 1546, 1548, 1551, 1560. 2. 'Yet a Course at the Romysh Fox,' by John Harrison, i. e. Bale. Zurich. 1546. 3. 'The Apology of Johan Bale agaynst a Ranke Papist,' &c. 4. 'An Exposition or Complaint againste the Blasphemies of a Frant-Papyst of Hamshyre,' &c. 5. 'The Image of bng Churches,' &c. 6. These islands were taken from the Carthaginians by Q. Metellus, who on that account was surnamed Balearius. In 426 they fell into the hands of the Vandals, and in 798 into those of the Moors, who were expelled from thence by James I, king of Arragon, in 1230. Alphonsus I became entire master of them in 1344, after having expelled a relation of his, who was king of the Baleares; since which time they have been in the hands of the Spaniards. The king of the Baleares was among the number of the slain in the French army at the battle of Cressy. Polyb. l. 3; Diodor. l. 5; Caesar. de Bell. Gall. l. 2, c. 7; Liv. Epit. l. 60; Strab. l. 14; Mela, l. 2, c. 9; Plin. l. 3, c. 5; Flor. l. 3, c. 8; Eustath. ad Dionys. v. 457; Marian. de Reb. Hispan.

BALECHOU, Nicholas (Biog.) an engraver of Arles, was born in 1719, and died in 1765. His principal pieces were 'Les Belles Marines,' 'St. Genevieve,' &c.

BALEN, Henderic Van (Biog.) a painter of Antwerp, died in 1632, aged 72. His best pieces are the 'Drowning of Pharaoh, and the 'Judgment of Paris.' His son John was also eminent as a landscape painter.

BALES, Peter (Biog.) a master in the art of penmanship, was born in 1547, and is supposed to have died in 1610, after having been much employed by government in the exercise of his art, for which he stood pre-eminent. He published the fruit of his labours with the pen in his 'Writing Schoolmaster,' in three parts.

BALEUS (Hist.) king of Assyria, from A. M. 2199 to 2228. BALEUS, another king of Assyria, from A. M. 2302 to 2353.

His works were, 1. 'A Discourse of three Kinds of Pepper in Common Use,' 8vo. 1558. 2. 'A Brief Treatise of the Preservation of the Eye-sight,' 12mo. Oxford, 1614 and 1654. 3. 'Directions for Health, Natural and Artificial,' &c. 4. 'Explicatio Galeni de Potu Convalescentium et Senum,' &c. 4to. in MS. in the library of Robert, earl of Aylesbury.

BALGUY, John (Biog.) an English divine, was born in 1686, and died in 1795. He published, 1. 'Silvius' Examination of certain Doctrines lately taught and defended by the Rev. Mr. Stebbing; and in the following year 'Silvius' Letter to the Rev. Dr. Sherlock;' both written in defence of bishop Hoadley in regard to the Bangorian Controversy; this was followed by one or two pieces on the same subject. 2. 'A Letter to a Deist concerning the Beauty and Excellence of Moral Virtue,' &c. 1726, opposed to the principles of Lord Shaftesbury. 3. 'The Foundation of Moral Goodness, or a further Inquiry into the Original of our Idea of Virtue,' in which he opposes the notions of Hutchinson. 4. 'The Second Part of the Foundation of Moral Goodness,' &c. 5. 'Divine Rectitude,' &c. 6. 'Essay on Redemption,' &c.

BALGUY, Thomas, son of the preceding, was born in 1716, admitted of St. John's college, Cambridge, in about 1732, proceeded A.B. 1737, A.M. in 1741, and died prebendary of Winchester in 1795, being prevented by his blindness from accepting the bishopric of Gloucester, to which the king, without any solicitation, had nominated him on the death of bishop Warburton. He published some assize sermons and charges, which had drawn forth considerable opposition from the ill-affected part of the religious public.

BALHARA (Hist.) a name common in the 9th century to all the emperors of India.

BALIOI, John de (Hist.) founder of Baliol or Balliol college, Oxford, and son of Hugh de Balliol, of Bernard castle, near Durham; was governor of Carlisle in 1248; guardian to Alexander III, king of Scotland, and Margaret his wife; and died about 1266, or, as some think, in 1269, after having served the king Henry III in his wars with the barons.

BALIOI, John de, son of the preceding, laid claim to the crown of Scotland on the death of Margaret, as a descendant from David, earl of Huntingdon, brother to king William the Lion. He was opposed by Bruce, but supported by Edward I, who acted as arbitrator. After doing homage to the latter in 1292, he attempted to shake off the English yoke, but was defeated and taken prisoner at the battle of Dunbar; after his release, which was effected through the intercession of the pope's legate in 1299, he retired to France, where he died in 1344. [Vide Plate V]

BALIOI, Edward de, son of the preceding, obtained the throne of Scotland, but, dying a short time after, the family became extinct. His effigy is given as in the annexed figure.

BALISTA, Servius Anicius (Hist.) a usurper, who assumed the imperial purple in Asia, and was slain by a common soldier by order of Odenatus, A. D. 262.

BALISTA (Nums.) some few medals of the above-mentioned usurper are extant, bearing the inscriptions IMP. C. BALISTA P. F. AUG.—SERVIUS ANIC. BALISTA, &c. —SERVIUS ANICIUS BALISTA, &c. Goltz. Thes.; Med. Num. Imp. Rom. Bandur. &c.

BALL, Sir Alexander John (Hist.) third son of Robert Ball of Ebworth and Stoneham, co. Gloucestershire, rear-admiral of the Blue, was commander of the blockade of Malta, and after its capture, was appointed its governor. He was created a baronet in 1801, and died in 1809. [Vide Ball under Heraldry]

BAMBA (Hist.) or Wamba, king of the Visigoths in Spain, was of the blood royal, but was taken from the plough to sit on the throne at the death of Receswind, or Recesvinte, in 672; and died, as is said, of poison administered to him by a cousin of his predecessor, after a reign of eight years and upwards.

BAMBERG (Geog.) a town of Bavaria, situated on the Regnitz, which falls into the Maine a little below the town; 30 miles N. N. W. Nuremberg, 110 E. Mentz. Lon. 10° 35' E. lat. 49° 36' N.

History of Bamberg.

It was called in the Latin of the middle ages Bamberga, Pamberga, Papeberga, Badenberga, and has been supposed by some to occupy the site of the ancient Bergium. The present town however was built in the 10th century, and erected into a bishopric by the emperor Henry II; and obtained, among other privileges, that its bishop should take precedence of all others in Germany. Everard, chancellor of Otho III, was the first who held the sec. During the seven years' war this town was subjected to two heavy contributions by the Prussians, one in 1758, and the other in 1702. It suffered considerably from inundations in 1784; and in 1796 from the exactions of the French.

BAMBOCIO (Biog.) a painter, otherwise called Peter Van Laer, was born at Laeren, in Holland, in 1613, and died in 1675. He was highly esteemed for the natural ease with which he delineated his characters, particularly those of the ordinary sort, as shops, cattle, and the like.

BAMBRIDGE, Christopher (Ecc.) or Bainbridge, archbishop of York, and cardinal priest of the church of Rome, was born at Hilton, near Appleby, in Westmorland, and died in 1514, at Rome, of poison, that was given to him by one of his domestics whom he had chastised. He was distinguished chiefly by his embassy from king Henry VIII to pope Julius II, who created him a cardinal in 1511.

BANCHI, Seraphim (Ecc.) a Dominican of Fiesoli, who was made bishop of Angoulême for having transmitted to court the design which Peter Bause had communicated to him of assassinating that monarch; by which means he was discovered at the moment he was ready to perpetrate the deed. He resigned his bishopric in 1608, for the life of a recluse. His writings were mostly controversial, except 1. 'Histoire Prodigueuse du Parricide de Barriere,' 8vo. 1594. 2. 'Apologie contre les Jugemens Temeraires de ceux, qui ont pensé conserver la Religion Catholique en faisant assassiner les Très Chrétiens Rois de France,' 8vo. Paris, 1596. 3. 'Le Rosaire Spirituel de la Sacrée Vierge Marie,' 12mo. Paris, 1610; wherein he justifies himself against the charge of having abused the confession of Peter Barriere, by denying that he ever was his confessor.

BANCK, Lawrence (Biog.) a lawyer, was born at Narcopin, in Sweden, and died in 1662. He published, 1. 'De Tyrannide Papæ in Reges et Principes Christianos,' Franck. 1649. 2. 'Roma Triumphans, seu Inauguratio Innocentii X,' 1669; with several other works of the same kind, the principal of which was an edition of the Taxes of the Roman Chancery, on the sums paid for absolution of crimes.

BANCROFT, Richard (Ecc.) archbishop of Canterbury in the reign of James, was born in 1544, took his degrees at Cambridge in 1566 and 1570, was raised, after various preferments, to the see of London in 1597, and at the death of archbishop Whitgift, in 1604, was nominated to succeed him in that dignity. He died in 1610, after having zealously supported the prerogatives of the crown and the church against the encroachments of the puritanical party. He published 'A Sermon preached at St. Paul's Cross against the Ambition of the Puritans,' printed with a tract of his, entitled, 'Survey of the pretended Holy Discipline.' He wrote also another tract, entitled, 'Dangerous Positions.'

BANCROFT, John, nephew to the primate, was admitted a student of Christ Church, Oxford, in 1592; and after taking his degrees, and being elected head of University College, he was promoted to the see of Oxford, when he built a house or palace for his successors at Cuddesdon. He died in 1640, leaving the character of a loyalist and episcopalian in a licentious age.

BANDARRA, Gonzales (Biog.) a Portuguese cobbler and a visionary, who was imprisoned by the inquisition for his pretended prophecies, and after narrowly escaping a severe punishment, he died in 1560, leaving a book of predictions, which Vieira, a Portuguese Jesuit, has undertaken to defend.

BANDELLA, Matthew (Ecc.) bishop of Agen, died about 1561, leaving a number of works, the principal of which are his Novels, after the manner of Boccace; the best edition of which is that of Lucca, 3 vols. 4to. 1554; to which belongs a fourth volume, printed at Lyons, in 8vo. 1573; this was reprinted at London, in 4 vols. 4to. 1740.

making in all degrees. It comprehended what was known by the ancients under the names of Mauritania Caesariensis and Tingitana, Africa proper, Nemida, and Lybia exterior or Cyrenica, and was distinguished as the seat of ancient Carthage, after the fall of which it became, on account of its fertility, the granary of Italy for many centuries. From the Romans it passed into the hands of the Vandals and other Northern barbarians, who retained possession of it from 427 to 568, when it was brought by Belisarius under the dominion of the Greeks till the 7th century, when the Mohammedan Arabs overran all this part of Africa, and divided themselves into petty kingdoms and states. In the 11th century it was formed into an empire by Aben Taksin, of the Zinghaghian tribe, who founded the dynasty of the Marabites, or Almoravides, which were expelled in the 12th century by Abdallah, surnamed Mohavedin, a famed preacher, who dethroned Al Abraham, the last emperor of the Zinghaghian dynasty, and founded a new one called Mohavedins, Mohavedes, or Almohades. The successors of this usurper were Abdalnuumen Yusef Joacob, surnamed Al Mansur; and Mohammed Al Naker, the last of this priestly race, which was exterminated by Abdulac, governor of Fez, of the race of the Benimerini, who, in their turn, were obliged to yield to the sharifs of Morocco, descended from the Arabian princes, who had flourished in the 10th century. Barbary now contains the kingdom of Morocco and Fez, and the states of Algiers, Tunis, and Tripoli, besides some few independent principalities, which are altogether comprehended under the name of the Barbary States.

History of Barcelona.

Barcelona passed from the dominion of the Romans to that of the Visigoths in the fifth century, from whom it was taken by the Saracens in the eighth century; and in 801 it came into the hands of Charlemagne, who appointed governors with the title of counts. In 1137 it was united to the crown of Arragon by the marriage of Raymond V, count of Barcelona, with the daughter of Ramiro II, king of Arragon. It was bombarded by a French fleet in 1691, and taken by that power in 1697, but restored to Spain at the peace of Ryswick. It was besieged and taken by the duke of Berwick in 1714 after an obstinate resistance; and in 1808 it was surprised by the French, who kept possession of it till 1814.

BASLE (Geog.) Basel, or Basil, a town of Switzerland and the capital of a canton of the same name, situated on the Rhine, 174 miles N. by R. Geneva, and 250 E. by S. Paris. Lon. 7° 30' E. lat. 47° 35' N.

History of Basle.

Basle, which is called in the Latin Basilea, Augusturum, was a town of some consideration in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus in the sixth century, but of which nothing certain is known. It is supposed that Julian the Apostate enlarged it, and gave it the name of Basilea in honour of his mother Basiline. The emperor Gratian built two strong forts to protect it against the irruptions of the Germans. The emperors Henry I and II beautified it exceedingly, and conferred many privileges upon it, making it a free city. It submitted to the emperor in the 13th century, but in 1501 it entered into the Helvetic league, and formed a new canton. A treaty of peace was concluded here between France and the three several states of Prussia, Spain, and Hesse Cassel.

Ecclesiastical History.

The bishops of Basle were for some time lords of Brisac, but the lordship fell at length into the hands of Austria; and at the reformation the inhabitants abolished the episcopal government. The first bishop of this city mentioned in history is Justinian. A general council was held here in 1423 during the pontificate of Martin, which was the 18th general council that had been held. A council was likewise held here as early as 1061, and a synod in 1681.
